

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

BRADSHAW'S
ILLUSTRATED
HAND BOOK TO BELGIUM
AND THE RHINE.

SOUTH EASTERN RAILWAY.

THE MAIL SHORT SEA-ROUTE TO ALL PARTS OF THE CONTINENT COMBINING ADVANTAGES POSSESSED BY NO OTHER ROUTE.

LONDON, PARIS, AND THE SOUTH OF EUROPE,

via Folkestone and Boulogne, and Dover and Calais.

Paris 12 hours. Switzerland (Bale) 37½ hours.

Marseilles 34 hours. Bordeaux 38 hours.

Sea-passage under 2 hours. Four departures daily:—

Leave London	Arrive at Paris	Leave Paris	Arrive in London
1. By Tidal Train, via Folkestone and Boulogne. For times of Sailing see Company's Time-book Bradshaw's Guides, and the "Times."
2. 8 15 a.m. (via Calais)	10 20 p.m.	8 0 a.m.	10 10 p.m.
3. 1 30 p.m.	5 30 a.m.	1 45 p.m.	4 30 a.m.
4. 8 30 p.m.	9 10 a.m.	7 30 a.m.	7 45 a.m.

Tidal Service.—Baggage can be Registered so as to save intermediate Customs examination; and each Train is accompanied throughout by an Interpreting Conductor.

Fixed Services.—The 8 15 a.m. train from London (by which baggage is registered), and the 8 0 a.m. train from Paris, will be found specially convenient by those who cannot avail themselves of the Tidal train. Baggage is registered also to and from Paris by the night mail trains.

LONDON, BELGIUM, HANOVER, GERMANY, THE RHINE, AND THE NORTH OF EUROPE,

via Dover and Calais, and Dover and Ostend.

Brussels in 13 hours. Berlin in 35 hours.

Cologne in 19 hours. Hamburg in 36 hours.

Three departures from London daily, viz. 8 15 a.m. (the most convenient service), 30 p.m., and 8 30 p.m. trains.

Baggage.—On and after the 1st July, passengers can register their baggage from London to Brussels and Cologne, by the 8 15 a.m. and 8 30 p.m. trains, and vice versa by all through trains. 50 lbs. weight of registered luggage will be allowed each passenger free on the Belgian and Rhenish Railways, payment for excess luggage, and for the landing, shipping and conveying of baggage throughout, can be made at the commencement of the journey, so as to save the passenger from the trouble of subsequent demands.

Through Tickets (enabling the passenger to stop at certain places on the journey) and all information may be obtained at the Chief Offices, London Bridge Station; 40, Regent Circus, Piccadilly City—147, Cheapside, and 20, Moorgate Street. Paris—4, Boulevard des Italiens. Brussels—74, Montagne de la Cour.
C. W. EBORALL, General Manager.
London Terminus, June, 1857.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

LONDON, BRIGHTON, AND SOUTH COAST RAILWAY.

P A R I S
AND ALL PARTS OF THE
C O N T I N E N T,
VIA NEWHAVEN AND DIEPPE.

THE SHORTEST AND CHEAPEST ROUT

FARES THROUGHOUT:

First Class.....28s. | Second Class.....20s

FOR Times of Sailing, and full particulars, see Advertisements in BRADSHAW'S GUIDE FOR GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND; also BRADSHAW'S CONTINENTAL GUIDE; the TIMES Newspaper; the TIME TABLES of the BRIGHTON AND SOUTH COAST, AND THE LONDON & NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANIES.

Every information may be obtained respecting this pleasant and beautiful route, on application in LONDON to H. P. MAPLES, 4, Arthur Street (opposite the Monument), London Bridge; and at the LONDON AND BRIGHTON RAILWAY OFFICES, London Bridge, and at all their various Stations; also at the COMPANY'S OFFICES, 43, Regent's Circus, Piccadilly.—In PARIS, to M. BOSSON, 7, Rue de la Paix; and at 35, Quai Henry IV., DIEPPE.

AT

B. BARRETT, BROS. 184 OXFORD STREET, 184 LONDON.

The most varied assortment of Railway and Continental

TRUNKS,

OVERLAND

AND

AIR-TIGHT CASES

TO INDIA.

Every attention has been paid in the arrangement of this Portmanteau, for allowing ample space for Linen, Dresses, and Bonnets.

GENTLEMAN'S PORTMANTEAU,
Adapted to ride under the Seats of Railway Carriages

"BARRETT BROTHERS' ULTIMATUM."

This Portmanteau, as its name denotes, is the perfection of many successive efforts to produce an article that should combine the utmost extent of portability with extreme commodiousness. It will be perceived that it contains no less than five compartments, each calculated to perfectly isolate its contents, and at the same time to afford ready access to them; whilst its solid construction and perfect finish render its durability and economy apparent at a glance.

Illustrated Catalogues forwarded on receipt of one Stamp

THE BEST & CHEAPEST
TEAS
IN ENGLAND ARE AT ALL TIMES TO BE OBTAINED OF
PHILLIPS AND COMPANY,
TEA MERCHANTS,
8, KING WILLIAM STREET, CITY, LONDON.
Really Good Strong Useful Congou Teas at 2s. 8d., 2s. 10d., 3s., and 3s. 2d.

TEAS, COFFEES, AND SPICES SENT CARRIAGE FREE

To any Railway Station or Market Town in England, if to the value of 40s. or upwards. By this liberal arrangement, those residing at a distance can enjoy all the advantages of the London Markets for Tea, Coffee, and Colonial Produce, just as though they were residing in London.

PHILLIPS AND COMPANY,
TEA MERCHANTS,
3, KING WILLIAM STREET, CITY, LONDON.

A General Price Current is published every month, containing all the advantages of the London Markets, and is sent free by Post on application.

SUGARS ARE SUPPLIED AT MARKET PRICES.

UNDER DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE.

PETER ROBINSON,
103, OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

FAMILY MOURNING

Forwarded to all parts of the United Kingdom.

P. R. respectfully announces that his Mourning Warehouse offers advantages to Families of the highest distinction, and also to those of limited means. Families waited on, either in town or any part of the country, with Goods for selection. Pattern Bodies forwarded to the Warehouse will meet with immediate attention.

Skirts, Trimmed with Crape, from 1 Guinea upwards.

Mantles in Rich Silk, trimmed with Crape, 1 to 5 Guineas.

Bonnets in beautiful variety, from 12s. 6d. to £2 2s.

Widows' Best Caps, 3s. 6d.

Flounced Silk Skirts, flounces trimmed, from £2 2s.

PRICES AND PATTERNS FREE.

Address—PETER ROBINSON, Family Mourning Warehouse,
103, Oxford Street, London.

IN CONNECTION WITH THE

GENERAL DRAPERY ESTABLISHMENT,
105, 106, and 107, OXFORD STREET,

Silk Dresses.

Ball Ditto.

Scotch and Norwich Ditto.

General Drapery.

Ribbons.

Lace.

Gloves.

Collars and Sleeves.

MANTLE, JACKET, AND SKIRT ROOMS. (30)

W. & T. ALLEN, 18 & 22, STRAND.

Illustrated Catalogues of 500 other articles, by Post for two stamps.

 ALLEN'S
PATENT QUADRUPLE
PORTMANTEAU.

MOROCCO LEATHER
DRESSING BAGS.

Allen's Patent Russia Leather Despatch Box-Desk.

ALLEN'S
PATENT TRAVELLING BAG, WITH SQUARE OPENING.

Russia Leather Dressing Case to fit into Despatch Box, or travel separately.

J. W. and T. ALLEN, Manufacturers of Portable Military Furniture for the Barrack-room, Camp, or Field.—(See separate Catalogues.)

CORDING'S WATERPROOFS

AND

CORDING'S FISHING BOOTS

ARE THE BEST THAT CAN BE HAD.

USED BY OFFICERS OF BOTH SERVICES, AND FIRST SPORTSMEN IN THE WORLD.

J. C. CORDING, 231, STRAND, TEMPLE BAR, LONDON.

WEDDING AND BIRTH-DAY PRESENTS.

WATCHES, CHAINS,

AND JEWELLERY

OF FIRST QUALITY, AT

LOWEST POSSIBLE PRICES.

SPOONS AND FORKS ELECTRO-PLATED WITH PUREST SILVER

GEORGE CORDING, 232, STRAND, TEMPLE BAR, LONDON.

BRADSHAW'S
ILLUSTRATED HAND-BOOK
FOR BELGIUM AND THE RHINE;
AND
PORTIONS OF RHENISH PRUSSIA.

WITH MAPS AND ILLUSTRATIONS.

LONDON:
W. J. ADAMS, (BRADSHAW'S GUIDE OFFICE), 59, FLEET STREET;
MANCHESTER:—BRADSHAW AND BLACKLOCK, 47, BROWN STREET;
LIVERPOOL:—T. FAIRBROTHER, 46, DALL STREET;
BIRMINGHAM:—JAMES GUEST, 51, BULL STREET; SHEFFIELD:—R. CHANDLER, 31, CHANCE ALLEY; EDINBURGH:—MOODIE & LOTHIAN, 76, PRINCES STREET; GLASGOW:—JAMES REID, 144, ARGYLE STREET;
DUBLIN:—A. CARSON, 51, GRAFTON STREET (CORNER OF STEPHEN'S GREEN);
PARIS:—A. & W. GALIGNANI, READING ROOM, LIBRARY, &c., 234, RUE DE RIVOLI;
J. DAWES, 3, PLACE VENDÔME (Three Doors from the Rue St. Honoré); L. N. BELLINGER, 112, RUE DE RIVOLI; BRUSSELS:—MR. FLATTAU, BOOKSELLER, MONTAGNE DE LA COUR;
COLOGNE:—F. C. RISEN, No. 2, FREDERICK WILHELM STREET, Bookseller to the King of Prussia; FRANKFORT (ON THE MAINE):—C. JUGEL, ENGLISH AND FOREIGN BOOKSELLER; UNITED STATES:—EDWARDS, SANDFORD, & Co., NEW YORK, BALTIMORE, AND PHILADELPHIA.
And Sold by all Booksellers, and at all Railway Stations throughout Great Britain, Ireland, and the Continent.

EDITORIAL MANAGER:—W. MIDDLETON, Brussels, to whom all Continental Advertisements for insertion in the HAND BOOK should be addressed.
Communications having references to this work to be addressed to the Editorial Manager of Bradshaw's Guide and Hand Books, 40, Fleet Street, London.

1857,

246. L. 4

BRADSHAW AND BLACKLOCK, PRINTERS, MANCHESTER.

HAND-BOOK FOR BELGIUM AND THE RHINE,
AND
PORTIONS OF RHENISH PRUSSIA.

CONTENTS.

INTRODUCTION.

SECTION I.—BELGIUM.

	PAGE.
Diligences.....	x.
General View of Belgium—Works of Art, &c.	xii.
Hired Carriages—Barriers—Roads	x.
Hotels	xi.
Money	x.
Passports	ix.
Posting	x.
Prices of Refreshments at Railway Stations	xi.
Railways	xix.
Vigilantes.....	xi.

SECTION II—THE RHINE.

	PAGE.
Expenses at Inns in Germany.....	86
Hotel Charges in Prussia	86
Inns	86
Passports	86
Tables D'Hôte	86

SECTION I.—BELGIUM.

	PAGE		PAGE
London to Brussels	1	Namur to Liège	50
(via Calais, Dover, Lille, Courtray, Ghent and Malines).		Ghent to Antwerp	55
Lille to Brussels	15	Antwerp to Brussels	56
London to Brussels	17	Antwerp to Turnhout	56
(via Dover, Ostend, Bruges, Ghent and Malines).		Namur to Treves	57
London to Antwerp	23	Mons to Manage	58
Bruges to Courtray	30	Charleroi to Morialme	59
Courtray to Ypres	31	Namur to Dinant and Givet	59
Waterloo to NAMUR	42	Landen to St. Trond and Hasselt	60
Brussels to Charleroi and Namur	47	Brussels to Cologne	61

SECTION II.—THE RHINE.

	PAGE		PAGE
London to Rotterdam	86	Mayence to Metz	124
Rotterdam to Nymegen	89	Mayence to Strasburg	124
Arheim to Cologne	90	Frankfort to Basle	133
Cologne to Coblenz	92	Carlsruhe (Oos) to Baden-Baden	147
Coblenz to Mayence	104	Baden to Strasburg	151
Mayence to Frankfort	117	Offenburg to Constance	152
Bingen to Mayence	120	Freiburg to Schaffhausen	155
Saarbrück to Treves	120

APPENDIX.

	PAGE		PAGE
Wiesbaden	156	Schwalbach	159
Kems	157	Schlangenbad	159
Homburg	158	The Moselle.—Coblenz to Treves	160

PREFACE.

THE Hand-books hitherto published for the use of travellers on the Continent have been the subject of so much complaint and objection, both in reference to their bulk and voluminous character, that the Publishers of the present volume determined to meet the requirements and oft-expressed wishes of the public, by undertaking the task of supplying to them Continental Hand-books, small and convenient in size, yet replete with all the descriptive, historical, and other useful information so ably and faithfully given in the large volumes published by their contemporaries. And they trust that this effort of theirs will not be looked upon as an unwarrantable intrusion upon ground already occupied, nor yet as an unworthy rival to books of a larger and more elaborate description.

The present Hand-book furnishes the traveller with a valuable companion in his tour through Belgium and on the Rhine. And with a view to his convenience and information, we have given him a book small and compact, capable of being consigned to the pocket, or borne in the hand without trouble or annoyance; whilst it furnishes him with matter-of-fact descriptions of what ought to be seen on his journey and in his visits, carefully selecting all the historical details, anecdotes of interest, and such other matters as we believe calculated to interest, whilst they instruct the English traveller, at the same time that we have excluded all that was dry or useless. In our descriptions of buildings and institutions, though we have not burdened our readers with the genealogical histories of their founders, proprietors, and architects, yet we have not confined ourselves to giving a mere catalogue of them, but we have furnished all that was valuable in connection with their histories, paintings, and architecture, at the same time that we have illustrated them by very beautiful wood-cuts and engravings.

In all our arrangements we have observed, so far as possible, a simple and condensed style; and wherever practicable have availed ourselves of good and correct information gathered from other sources. The nature or character of this volume tolerates little novelty, and admits of no deviation from the principle on which such a work must be essentially based. Books in foreign languages must be the chief sources of our information, modified by personal observation and experience.

1

We meet the traveller in England, impart to him the information necessary for the purpose of preparation, directing him in reference to the management of his passport and luggage at home and on the Continent; we lead him by the most approved routes through his tour, and place before him every item of instruction useful to him in his journey. We do not, however, say that our work is faultless. Were it so, we should have achieved an impossibility, for we believe that Hand-books are "like watches, the worst better than none—the best cannot be expected to go quite true." We know the severe ordeal a Hand-book for travellers abroad has to pass through; we can thoroughly appreciate the merciless criticism which will test its truth when weighing its accuracy on the very spot described, but however we fearlessly and confidently launch it forth, trustful in the forbearance of all, whilst hopeful that those who make use of it will kindly favour us by forwarding to us corrections of any errors or inaccuracies they may discover in it.

In conclusion, we can only remark that in the editing of the present volume we have aimed at the medium between an useless repetition of detail, and the annoyance of a tasteless brevity of description; and trust the traveller may not find it less useful than interesting.

INTRODUCTION.

PASSPORTS—MONEY—POSTING—DILIGENCES, HIRED CARRIAGES, BARRIERS, ROADS—VIGILANTES—BELGIAN HOTELS—PRICES OF REFRESHMENT AT THE BELGIAN RAILWAY STATIONS—GENERAL VIEW OF BELGIUM—RAILWAYS IN BELGIUM.

PASSPORTS.—CUSTOM HOUSE.

BRITISH subjects, on entering Belgium, are required to be provided with either a Belgian passport, or a British or other passport, countersigned by a Belgian authority. When only traversing Belgium, going to Prussia, British subjects will require British passports. Should this form be omitted, they will require the visé of the Prussian Minister in Belgium. On landing in Belgium without a passport in due form, travellers are exposed to be conducted, by the police, either to the consul or to the bourgmestre, before they are enabled to obtain a passport and continue their journey in Belgium. Passports and visés are obtained at the Consul's Office, Adelaide Chambers, 52, Gracechurch Street. Hours, from eleven to four. Passports for Belgium only, are granted to British subjects on payment of 6s. 6d. Visés, 8s. 9d. Travellers proceeding through Belgium to the Rhine, must enter their luggage for Cologne, where it is examined. Ambassador's residence, 20, Lowndes Square.

MONEY.—Although in some places accounts are still kept in guilders and cents, French money is so generally current, that a traveller who confines himself to Belgium need not provide himself with any other. At all the large towns English sovereigns will be readily exchanged, and should command the full equivalent of 25 fr. 20 cts., or as near as possible, according to the rate of exchange. A new gold coin, 25 francs value, has recently been issued. The Belgian bank issues notes of the value of 1000, 500, 100, 50, 20, and 5 francs.

BELGIAN AND FRENCH MONEY.

	ENGLISH.
	s. d.
1 Franc = 100 centimes = 20 sous	0 9½
SILVER COINS.
¼ Franc = 25 centimes	0 2½
½ Franc = 50 centimes	0 4½
5 Franc	4 0
GOLD COINS.
Louis d'or = 24 francs	19 0
Leopold d'or, Napoleon, or Twenty Franc Piece...	15 10

POSTING is now nearly obsolete, but a post is equivalent to five English, or about one German mile, or to two Belgian or French leagues. The charge per post, for each horse, is 1 fr. 30 cts., and for each postillion that distance, 15 sous. Half a post extra is charged for post-horses arriving at Brussels or quitting it, and a fourth extra on quitting Ghent, Liège, Namur, and Mons. One horse is allotted by the posting regulation, to each person in a carriage, but the traveller can take the full complement of horses required for his journey at the rate of 30 sous each, or he can take two or three at 30 sous, and without taking the rest, pay for the team at 20 sous. At this rate a party of four persons can travel in a light britska, drawn by two horses, paying 2 fr. extra for the two persons. By payment of 80 sous per post for their horses, three persons can travel with two horses. A berlin or landau will take three or four horses; a chariot, 3; a britzka, though carrying the same number of persons, two.

DILIGENCES, HIRED CARRIAGES, BARRIERS, ROADS.

On all the high roads which have no railroad to compete with, diligences are found to run. They travel at the rate of about six miles an hour, and generally belong to private individuals licensed by government.

HIRED CARRIAGES.—A voiture, with two horses, can be engaged for about 30 fr per day, including 5 fr. to the driver. 25 fr. a day, back fare, must be paid (making in all 50 fr. for carriage and horses.

BARRIERS.—There is a toll-gate each league, at which four-wheeled carriages are charged 10 cents., and each horse 20 cents., the return included.

ROADS.—In general the Belgian roads are paved, thus rendering travelling over them very fatiguing, especially to ladies.

VIGILANTES.

A kind of cab called by the above name can be hired for 1 fr., or before 7 a.m. for 1½ fr., which will convey the traveller and his luggage to his resting place. He should take one at once on his arrival, and thus save himself the annoyance he is, otherwise, sure to suffer from porters and commissionaires of the hotels.

The general tariff is 1 fr. per course, and, if engaged by the hour, 1½ fr. the first hour, and 1 fr. each hour afterwards.

BELGIAN HOTELS.

The following are the average charges:—From 1½ to 2½ fr. for bed; table d'hôte, 2 to 3 fr.; dinner in a separate apartment, by one's self, 5 fr.; supper at table d'hôte, 1 fr. 50 cents. to 2 fr.; a bottle of Bordeaux vin ordinaire, 8 fr.; breakfast, with eggs and meat, 1 fr. 50 cents.; coffee, tea, and bread and butter, 1 to 1½ fr.; servants, 50 cents. to 1 fr. each.

PRICES OF REFRESHMENTS AT THE BELGIAN RAILWAY STATIONS.

BUFFETS-RESTAURANTS ETABLIS DANS LES STATIONS DE MALINES, TIRLEMONT, LANDEN, LIEGE, PEPINSTER, VERVIERS, GAND, COURTRAI, MOUSCRON, BRAINE-LÉCOMTE, ET QUIÉVRAIN.—TARIF DES COMESTIBLES ET BOISSONS.

	fr. cts.		fr. cts.
Bouillon	0 30	BIÈRES.
Beefsteak aux pommes de terre, avec pain	0 75	Une bouteille de Faro ou de Diest	0 80
Roastbeef aux pommes de terre, avec pain	0 75	Le verre	0 10
Filet de bœuf rôti	0 75	Une bouteille ou cruche, de lambic	0 40
Deux côtelettes de mouton	0 75	Une bouteille de Louvain	0 24
Portion de veau chaud ou côtelettes avec pommes de terre	0 60	Le verre	0 3
Portion de poulet chaud	0 90	Une bouteille de Bière de Bavière	0 75
Veau froid avec un petit pain	0 40	Bière brune, le verre	0 8
Jambon id. id.	0 40	VINS.
Bœuf salé id. id.	0 40	Vin de Bordeaux ordinaire ...la bouteille	2 0
Langue fumée id. id.	0 40	Id. id.la ½ id.	1 0
Poulet froid, la portion	0 75	Id. de St. Julien	la bouteille 2 50
Fromage	0 10	Id. id.la ½ id.	1 25
Id. Anglais	0 15	Id. de St. Emilion	la bouteille 2 50
Un petit pain beurré	0 7	Id. de St. Estèphe	Id. 2 50
Id. sans beurre	0 5	Id. de Cabarus, long bouchon, première qualité	la bouteille 3 50
Id. beurre et fromage	0 15	Id. de Cabarus, long bouchon, seconde qualité	la bouteille 3 0
Déjeuner (café ou thé, pain et beurre) ...	0 50	Id. de Chateau-Margaux ...	la 3 0
Café, la demi-tasse	0 25

			f. c.				f. c.
Vin de Volney.....			la bouteille	3	0	LIQUEURS.
Id. de Pommar		 id.	3	0	Schiedham	le verre	0 10
Id. de Nuits		 id.	3	0	Amer de Hollande	id.	0 10
Id. de Châblis		 id.	3	0	Eau-de-Vie.....	id.	0 10
Id. de Moselle		 id.	3	50	Cognac, Rhum, Kirsch	id.	0 25
Id. de Grave, prem. qualité			id.	3	50	Liqu-eurs fines de toute espèce ...	id.	0 25
Id. id. seconde id.			id.	3	0	Marasquin	id.	0 40
Id. de Tours		 id.	2	50	Punch à l'eau chaude	id.	0 25
Id. de Rhin; prem. qualité...			id.	4	0	RAFRAICHISSEMENT.
Id. id. seconde id.			id.	3	50
Champagne mousseux		 id.	6	0
VINS DE LIQUEUR.
Madère.....			le verre	0	50	Sirop de groseille, de mûres, de fram- boises, de limon, ou de punch, le verre}		0 25
Malaga			id.	0	50	Limonade ou orgeat.....		id.	0 25
Muscat			id.	0	50	Grog ou orgeat		id.	0 30
Frontignan ou Lunel		 id.	0	50	Eau sucrée avec eau de fleur d'oranger) le verre}		0 20
Porto.....			id.	0	60
Sherry (Xérès)			id.	0	60	Cigares et tabacs.....

NOTE.—The prices quoted in the above table must not always be depended upon, the charges sometimes varying at the different stations.

CARRIAGES.—Carriages of 2 wheels are charged 8 fr. from Quievrain to Mons, and 32 fr. to Brussels; those of 4 wheels, 12 fr. from Quievrain to Mons, and 48 fr. to Brussels; and of 2 wheels, 44 fr. from Mouscron to Brussels.

DOGS.—Dogs are charged at the rate of third class fare.

PRIVATE CARRIAGES.—Persons travelling in private carriages pay third class fare in addition to the charge for the carriage.

GENERAL VIEW OF BELGIUM.

Belgium was formerly identified with the kingdom of the Netherlands, but has ranked as a separate and independent kingdom since 1830. In the August of that year the Belgian provinces revolted, and threw off the yoke of Holland. On the 4th of October following, the independence of the kingdom was proclaimed by the provisional government, and recognised in the month of December by the allied powers of Europe.

The National Congress assembled at Brussels in 1831, and offered the throne of the new kingdom to the Duke of Nemours, which, on the son's behalf, was refused by his father, the late Louis Philippe, then King of the French. The next choice of the National Representatives fell upon Prince Leopold of Saxe Coburg, widower, of the Princess Charlotte of England, who ascended the throne, and took the oaths prescribed by the constitution, on the 22nd July, 1831, in the presence of the assembled representatives of the nation. Scarcely had Leopold assumed the sovereignty of Belgium than he concluded a treaty with the Courts of Great Britain, Russia, Austria,

France, and Prussia, fixing the boundaries of the new kingdom, and guaranteeing to the King free and peaceable possession of the states recognising his sovereignty.

The Belgic territory is small when compared with other European nations, it being no more than one-eighth of that of Great Britain, and having a population of little more than 4,000,000; yet the important position which it has occupied in the political, military, commercial, and agricultural history of Europe, its former celebrity in manufactures and the fine arts, and its present rapid progress in every industrial pursuit and social improvement, invest it with a peculiar interest for the historian, the traveller, and the student.

Its territory, as defined by the treaty before spoken of, which was signed in London, on the 15th November, 1831, consists of the provinces of South Brabant, Liège, Limbourg, Namur, Hainault, West and East Flanders, Antwerp, and Luxembourg; some districts particularly described, and part of the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg being excepted.

The general outline of the territory is a triangular figure, the longest side of which extends on the French frontier from a point midway between Furnes and Dunkirk, to one 9 miles south-east of Arlon, or 52 miles E. from Longroy. The parts ceded to Holland, and to which we alluded above, are—first, a portion of the province of Luxembourg, on the E. of an irregular line drawn from the point just mentioned to one on the Prussian frontier, about 17 miles S. of Malmedy; and secondly, the portions of Limbourg, on the W. of the river Meuse, including the city of Maestricht in a deviating curve, and on the north of a line from Stevensweirt, on the Meuse, to one on the Dutch frontier, 4 miles W. of Wiert.

The kingdom, as thus described, is bounded on the north by the Dutch province of Limbourg, and by North Brabant and Zeeland; on the north-west by the North Sea; on the S.W. and S. by the departments of the Pas de Calais, Nord, Ardennes, and Moselle, in France; and on the E. by the Dutch portion of the Grand Duchy of the Lower Rhine.

CIVIL DIVISIONS.—Brussels is the capital, and seat of government; for the administration of which the kingdom is divided into the 9 provinces above enumerated, 44 arrondissements, 98 towns, and 2,841 rural communes; for military purposes it is divided into 9 commanders, corresponding to the 9 provinces; and, lastly, for judicial proceedings, it is divided into 29 arrondissements, and 237 cantons.

AREA AND POPULATION.—Belgium lies between 49° 31' and 51° 27' N. latitude, and between 2° 3' and 6° E. longitude. Its greatest length from S.E. to N.W. is 173 English miles, and its greatest breadth, measured in the direction S. S. W., from the most northern part of the province of Antwerp, to the most southern part of the province of Hainault, 112 miles. Its area is computed to be 3,252,058 hectares, equal to 8,044,323 English acres, or 12,569 English square miles, and it has population of 4,064,285, exhibiting for every square mile 323 inhabitants.

GENERAL ASPECT OF THE COUNTRY.—The N. and W. provinces of Belgium, in their flatness, fertility, dykes, and canals, may be regarded as a continuation of Holland. This portion of the country is so densely populated that it presents to the traveller the appearance of one continuous village. The S. and E. provinces have an opposite character, being generally more thinly populated, less cultivated, and exhibiting a most irregular mountainous surface, with tracts of marshy lands and extensive forests. With the exception of three hilly districts in the south and east, the entire territory presents the appearance of a series of nearly level plains, traversed by numerous streams, delightfully diversified by woods, arable lands, and meadows of brilliant verdure, enclosed by hedge rows; and thickly studded throughout with towns and villages. In surveying the general face of the country, and proceeding from west to east, we observe that the coast is uniformly flat, and formed of fine loose sand, which, by the frequent action of the sea winds, is raised into gently undulating dunes or dunes. These banks of sand extend, nearly without interruption from Dunkirk, along the entire coasts of Belgium and Holland. In breadth they vary from one to three miles, and rise in the highest parts to 40 or 50 feet. They are formed entirely by the operation of the sea waves in elevating the deep sands of the shore, and, since they serve as a natural barrier against the encroachment of the ocean, it is an object of great importance to check their constant tendency to advance inland. For the purpose, therefore, of rendering the sand compact and stationary, the dunes are sown with a species of reed (arundo areni area), until a sufficient stratum of vegetable mould is collected to support plantations of firs (Pinus Maritimus), with which most of the Belgic dunes are generally covered.

Though no part of the surface of Belgium is actually below the level of the sea, like that of Holland, yet, in common with the latter, its shore in some parts is defended from the encroachments of the ocean by broad and elevated dykes; and whole districts, which were formerly alluvial morasses, have been gained entirely from the bed of the sea, after being drained and embanked. The embanked enclosures of this description are called polders. On the sea coast, and along the lower banks of the Scheldt, they are very numerous, and some contain above 1,000 acres of rich alluvial soil, which is appropriated with great advantage to the purposes of agriculture.

To the south-east of the dunes the provinces of West and East Flanders and Flanders form a far-stretching plain, the luxuriant vegetation of which indicates the indefatigable care and labour bestowed upon its cultivation, for the natural soil consists almost wholly of barren sand, and its great fertility is entirely the result of very skilful management and judicious application of various manures. The undulations in the surface of the northern districts is very slight, and the northern parts of the province of Antwerp are less varied and fertile than any other. The soil is for the most part composed of pure sand, very partially mixed with argillaceous earth. The largest unbroken plain in Belgium is called Campine, comprising the north-east portion of Antwerp and north-west of Liège. It consists of marshes, desolate moors, peat bogs, and extensive tracts of sand, covered with heath, broom, and firs. Some parts, however, consist of natural prairies, that serve as pasturage for extensive herds of excellent horses, and the portion of Limbourg, on the banks of the Meuse, is fertile and carefully cultivated. The character of Brabant resembles that of Flanders with respect to its beautiful fields, and gardens, and luxuriant trees. In the province of Liège the north bank overlooks a fertile plain, producing all kinds of grain and vegetables, and affording excellent pasturage for cattle and for dairy husbandry; but the country on the south bank of the river belongs to the mountainous district which constitutes the provinces of Luxembourg and Namur. The course of the Meuse, from Durant to Maestricht, offers some very picturesque combinations of landscapes and rock scenery. The river is closely shut in by lofty cliffs of various hues. Here they overhang the river, and are beautifully shrouded with bushes of box, wild myrtle, and ivy, and there they slope away to its margin, or are vertically cleft asunder, presenting through the chasm a delightful view of highly-cultivated farms and villages, half hidden by trees, in the distant highlands. The wild state of nature in the provinces of Namur, Liège, and Luxembourg, the various fossils and mineral products, and the charms of the scenery, have long made this part of the country a favourite of the naturalist, the geologist, and the painter.

CLIMATE.—The climate of Belgium is pure and healthy, but subject to much variation in its general character.

The GOVERNMENT is a limited constitutional monarchy, and the succession to the throne confined to the direct male issue, perpetually excluding females and their descendants. The legislative power is vested in the King and two chambers,—the Senate and the House of Representatives,—the members of which are elected by the people paying 80s. direct taxes annually. The number of representatives cannot exceed 1 to every 40,000 people, and in all cases the representative must be a Belgian by birth or naturalisation. The King enjoys the power of dissolving the chambers either together or separately, but the decrees of dissolution must contain an edict convoking the elective body within 40 days and the chambers within two months. Both chambers are elected by the people, and the upper one, or senate, consists of but one-half the number constituting the lower chamber. A senator must be a Belgian resident within the kingdom, and 40 years old, and be rated as paying annually 1,000 florins direct taxes—something about £84 sterling. The members of the House of Representatives are paid at the rate of £16 16s. monthly for their services during the session, but the senators, or members of the upper chamber, receive no pay.

ARTS AND SCIENCES.—Since Belgium became an independent nation, a great spirit of emulation and desire of improvement have arisen amongst all classes of the population. Energies have been awakened which have already achieved much in the cause of social and intellectual advancement, and which promise to accomplish more in the same honourable career. The government sustains and encourages the progress of science, learning, the fine arts, and literary tastes. Pensions are given to talented young men to enable them to develop the powers of their genius in foreign countries, by studying the works of the great masters; and a national exhibition is opened every year, in the large towns and cities successively, in which are displayed the paintings, sculptures, engravings, and designs of the best artists. The most meritorious works are rewarded by medals of gold, silver, and bronze.

MANNERS AND CUSTOMS.—The Belgians have been successively subjected to the influence of so many different governments, that they, consequently, possess no distinctive and peculiar national character. The apathy and persevering industry of the Dutch is blended with the vivacity and self-assurance of the French, without producing an agreeable compound. The different provinces exhibit some variety of character and manners. On the borders of Holland the people are generally similar to the Dutch, and adopt their customs, amusements, and dress. But in the southern districts they differ little from the French, in appearance, habits, manners, costume, or language. The Belgians have always displayed a passionate love for social liberty, an impatience of control, that embroiled them with all their different rulers, and involved them in ruinous disasters during many successive centuries. Writers of all ages agree in describing them as the most restless, unruly, tumult-loving mortals in existence, always treating their best rulers the worst, while the bad overawed them. In the history of no other country do we find such unbounded liberty, with such an invincible disposition to abuse it.

LANGUAGE.—About one-third of the population speak French (the Picard and Walloon dialects), the other two-thirds, Flemish. It may be said that the boundaries of the French and Flemish languages may be marked by a line, drawn east from Gravelines to the Lys, and along that river to Menin, and thence east again to the Meuse, by the south of Brussels and Louvain, between Maestrecht and Liège. South of this line French is spoken, and Flemish north of it. A more undulating line, drawn from Menin to the frontier near Chimay, and intersecting the country between Valenciennes and Mons, would draw a demarcation between the two dialects of the French spoken in Belgium. On the west of this line the Picard dialect is spoken, and the Walloon on the east of it.

WORKS OF ART.—SCHOOL OF PAINTING.—Belgium can boast of a brilliant history, not alone in reference to architecture; in her school of painting, we find an eminent degree of perfection characterising its productions, whilst its masters and students have been signally remarkable for their perfection in the art. This school may be looked upon as dating from two separate epochs, and may be designated the schools of Van Eyck and Rubens. The founders of the early school were the brothers Aubert and John Van Eyck, who are said to have lived between 1370 and 1445. The tone and character of their works, with those of their scholars, and the degree of perfection with which they had been executed, may be easily gleaned from their numerous productions still existing in Belgium, forming, as they do, a great attraction, and the study of which becomes a special object of interest in a Belgian tour. The traveller of taste will appreciate them as equalling, if not surpassing, in their excellence, the productions of their European contemporaries. So far back as 1358, a guild of painters was established at Bruges. This corporation of artists, in the reign of Philip the Good, enjoyed a deservedly eminent reputation, and in the days of Van Eyck we find, registered on its records, above three hundred names, constituting, as a whole, the most celebrated school of that period.

Though Van Eyck cannot be said to be the inventor of oil painting, yet he cannot be denied the credit of having been the perfector of, and may in some measure be esteemed the father of the art. The perfection to which he brought oil painting is fully seen, to the present day, in the deep brilliancy and liveliness discernible in all his works, which, by the freshness and perfect preservation of their colours, excite the wonder and admiration of every traveller. And it is also certain that his school must have achieved a high character for proficiency in this department, since we find Antonello of Messina, an Italian artist, travelling into Flanders in order to acquire a knowledge of it, though, two hundred years previously, oil painting had been practised in Italy.

With the works of Van Eyck and his brother must be associated Hans Memling another artist of the same school, whose chef d'œuvres exist in Bruges, in the Academy and Hospital of St. John.

In studying the productions of the early Flemish school we must not forget that their path was a new and entirely original one. Without the classic works of antiquity to guide them, or the great models of later times to imitate, they were forced by the necessity of circumstances to fall back upon the volume of nature; from it they took their models, and hence that formality, and stiffness, and meagreness of outline, so unpleasantly combined with a want of refinement in their works, which defects are more than covered by the elevated sentiment, sacred solemnity, and truthful force of expression marking them. Through the works of Quentin Matsys, Frans Floris, De Vos, the Bringhamas, &c., down to Otto Vennius and Rubens, we can distinguish the progress of the Flemish school.

SCHOOL OF RUBENS.—Rubens and his illustrious pupil Vandyke may be looked upon as the presiding geniuses of the second epoch in the history of the Belgian or Flemish school. We cannot, in any language of our own, better exhibit the character of the school, than that in which the head of it is described by Sir Joshua Reynolds, in the following extract: "The elevated situation in which Rubens stands in the esteem of the world, is a sufficient reason for some examination of his pretensions. His fame is extended over a great part of the continent without a rival; and it may be justly said that he enriched his country, not in a figurative sense alone, by the great examples of art which he left, but by what some would think a more solid advantage—the wealth arising from the concourse of strangers whom his works continually invited to Antwerp. To extend his glory still further, he gives to Paris one of its most striking features, the Luxembourg Gallery; and if to these we add the many towns, churches, and private cabinets, where a single picture of Rubens confers eminence, we cannot hesitate to place him in the first rank of illustrious painters."

In the present age, Belgium possesses a School of Living Artists, whose productions, especially those historical ones of Wappers de Keyzer, Bufer, Maes, &c. can bear competition with the best productions of the other schools of the present day.

ARCHITECTURE has been carried to its highest degree of perfection in the construction of the cathedrals and town halls of Belgium, which display the finest specimens of the ornamental Gothic style of the middle ages. In England, Gothic architecture is confined chiefly to churches, but in Belgium it is shewn to be equally suitable to civic edifices and private dwellings. Fronts richly decorated with quaint and fantastic sculptures, lofty sloping roofs, full of windows, pointed gables castellated towers, battlements, and projecting windows, combine to produce a general effect, which, from its grandeur and intricacy, delights the spectator.

MANUFACTURES.—The industry of the Flemings has within 200 years converted a tract of land, once a sandy and barren heath, into a beautiful garden; and the product of its wheat is often not less than sixteen to one, and oats ten to one, whilst scarcely in any part of Britain does wheat give more than eight or ten to one. East and West Flanders alone produce annually flax to the amount of £1,600,000. The coal mines of Hainault produce more than those of the whole of France; and the annual quantity raised in Belgium is 2,000,000 chaldrons. More than 150,000 tons of iron are annually founded. The cloth manufactures at Verviers employ 4,000 men; and the cotton manufacture, notwithstanding the loss of the Dutch colonial markets, has improved steadily since 1830, and now represents a capital of £3,000,000 sterling. Commerce has greatly increased in Belgium lately. The principal exports are the productions of its flourishing agriculture and numerous manufactures, such as corn, bran, coal, oil, lace, woollen and cotton cloths, linen, canvas, arms, cutlery, and ironmongery. The woollen manufacture may be said to constitute the staple manufacturing trade of Belgium. At all events it is the object of immense industry, and a quantity of foreign wool, to the value of 14,000,000 frs., or £583,333 6s. 8d. sterling, is consumed annually. Carpets, flax, and linen also constitute important items in the manufactures of Belgium. The cotton manufacture in Belgium represents a capital of 60,000,000 frs. in buildings and machinery, and the number of hands employed is at least 122,000. A brisk trade is likewise carried on in silk, lace, ribbons, hosiery, hats, leather, oil-cloth, paper, and lithography, &c.

COMMERCE.—The commerce of Belgium at present extends its relations to numerous parts of the world, and includes almost every indigenous and foreign production. The average amount of value it represents may be estimated at 860,000,000 francs—that is, 210,000,000 of imports and 150,000,000 of exports. The external commerce of Belgium suffered greatly by the revolution in 1830, as Holland has since retained and monopolised the trade with all the colonies which belonged to the kingdom of the United Netherlands.

RELIGION.—The Roman Catholic is the religion of the state, but the King is a Protestant, and every other form of faith has free exercise.

RAILWAYS.—Belgium is the first state in Europe in which a system of railways has been planned and executed at the public cost; and certainly it is an honourable distinction to have given the first example of such a national and systematic provision of the means of rapid communication. The undertaking was first projected in 1833, and the object proposed was to unite the principal commercial towns on one side with the sea, and on the other with the frontier of France and Prussia. In this respect Belgium is most favourably situated for the experiment of a general system of railroads. It is compact in form, moderate in size, and is surrounded on three of its sides by active commercial nations, and on the fourth by the sea, by which it is separated only a few hours' voyage from England. On the west are the two large and commodious ports of Antwerp and Ostend, and its east frontier is distant only a few leagues from the Rhine, which affords a connection with the nations of central and southern Europe. It is therefore in possession of convenient markets for its productions, and of great facilities for an extensive transit trade. The physical nature of the country is also most favourable, being for the most part very flat, and requiring but few of those costly works of levelling, tunnelling, and embanking which serve to increase so enormously the expense of similar undertakings in England.

THE RHINE.

There are rivers whose course is longer, and whose volume of water is greater, but none which unites almost every thing that can render an earthly object magnificent and charming, in the same degree as the Rhine. As it flows down from the distant ridges of the Alps, through fertile regions into the open sea, so it comes down from remote antiquity, associated in every age with momentous events in the history of the neighbouring nations. It rises in the Swiss canton of the Grisons from three principal sources. Before it falls into the lake of Constance, it forms the celebrated cataract of Schaffhausen, in the canton of Zürich, where the river is closely hemmed in by rocks. After having touched several cantons of Switzerland, also Austria, Baden, France, Bavaria, Hesse, Nassau, Prussia, &c., it divides into several branches. Vessels of from 300 to 450 tons go up the river to Cologne, those of 125 to 200 to Mayence, and those of 100 to 125 as far as Strasbourg. Steam Boats render communication easy; and so familiar has steam communication rendered us with the banks of the Rhine, that it has become an ordinary summer trip with the inhabitants of this country.

BELGIUM

ROUTE 1.—LONDON TO BRUSSELS,

BY CALAIS, DOVER, LILLE, COURTRAY, GHEENT, AND MALINES.

TRAVELLERS intending to proceed by this route start from London Bridge, and for $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles proceed through a beautiful country, which presents the aspect of a rus in urbe, being diversified in its sylvan character, and having its rural beauty heightened and embellished by the picturesque villas, stately mansions, and sweet cottages interspersed on every side along its delightful borders. At Sydenham, to the right of the railway, the Crystal Palace, removed from its original site in Hyde Park, greets the view, presenting the appearance of a massive and colossal temple, such as ancient or modern days have not before witnessed, and in which dwells the genius of peace, representing the combined elements of human industry, enriched by the triumphs of science in every department of its creative power and developed efficiency, both in reference to novel invention and improved principles. The tourist, as he is whirled along, cannot fail to be interested by even a transitory survey of its giant-like proportions and architectural design, whilst its general aspect bursts upon the astonished vision, its reflective grandeur shooting forth, if the day be clear and sunny, a flood of light, brilliant and gorgeous in its effulgence, giving it the appearance of some glittering palace, such as poets paint in their fanciful and ideal visions of those sunny lands where Eastern magnificence and Asiatic grandeur characterise and adorn the regal salons erected in the land of princes. Passing rapidly from here, the remaining portion of the journey to Dover is effected through an extent of country richly cultivated, tastefully laid out, and dotted with many very beautiful residences, but exhibiting in its general appearance nothing specially interesting, beyond the ordinary elegance, and soft, chaste beauty distinguishing English landscapes.

Arrived at Dover, luggage, &c., being duly attended to, the steam-boat is boarded: she starts, and after a trip of about two hours the chalky cliffs of England are lost sight of; shortly after which, amid noisy exclamations and shrill vociferations, the tourists, after enjoying about half an hour's huddling about, disembark at

Calais.—Hotels:

Hotel Quillac, one of the oldest and most respectable establishments on the Continent. It is well known and highly and deservedly recommended.

Hotel Dessein.

Hotel de Paris.

The proper and most advantageous course for parties to adopt on arrival here (providing they are not going to remain in Calais) is to proceed direct to the passport office in the railway station, situated within the precincts of the terminus, and procure the proper visa to their passports; after which they should proceed to an adjoining room, and have their luggage examined. This examination can be avoided by declaring it "for transit," to Brussels or Cologne.

Calais is a second-class fortress, and contains about 12,000 inhabitants. It is surrounded by sand-hills on one side, and by morasses on the other, which, though detracting from its beauty, yet adds much to its military strength. The town is situated in a very barren and non-picturesque district. It has latterly been re-fortified, and its works strengthened considerably particularly to the sea coast. Its harbour, which has been much improved and lengthened, is defended by several small forts, and consists of a large quay, terminated by two long wooden piers, stretching into the sea. Its inhabitants are chiefly engaged in the herring and cod-fishery trade, and carry on a considerable traffic to Utrecht.

spirits. Calais has lately taken to encourage manufacturing establishments — the bobbin-net (nylle) trade — carried on there with great vigour, in opposition to a similar branch of trade in England. Several mills have been established, steam-engines have also been introduced in increased numbers, and factories have been erected within the inner ramparts. It is stated that 55,000,000 of eggs are annually exported from this place to England.

The pier of Calais is three-quarters of a mile in length, and is used as an agreeable promenade. On a spot of it is seen the pillar erected to commemorate the return of Louis XVIII. to France. It originally bore the following inscription:—"Le 24 Avril, 1814, S. M. Louis XVIII. débarqua vis-à-vis de Cette Colonne et fut enfin rendu à l'amour des Français; pour en perpétuer le souvenir la ville de Calais a élevé ce monument." His Majesty Louis XVIII. disembarked beside this column on the 24th of April, 1814, and was at last restored to the love of the French people. The town of Calais erected this column to commemorate the event. A brazen plate was fixed on the exact spot where the Monarch's foot stepped, in order to further commemorate the act; but at the revolution of 1830 both plate and inscription were effaced, leaving the pillar to stand as a monument of the capriciousness of French enthusiasm. Calais has very little to interest; and though one or two incidents in its history are fraught with deep interest, particularly the recent embarkation of French troops on board of English ships for the Baltic, yet its objects of attraction are few, and may be visited in about two hours. Its principal gate, built in 1635 by Cardinal Richelieu, and figured by Hogarth in his celebrated picture, is worth a short inspection. The Hôtel de Guise will also interest the English traveller, as having been the place where Henry VIII. lodged, and as the original building where was established the guild hall of the mayor and aldermen of the "staple of wool," founded in 1363 by Edward III. The Hôtel de Ville, or Town Hall, situate in the market place, will repay a visit. Within it are all the public offices, and the front of it is ornamented with busts of St. Pierre, of the Duke of Guise, and of Cardinal de Richelieu. It is surmounted by a belfry, containing a chime of bells. The tower and steeple of the principal church, built when Calais appertained to England, deserves attention. Immediately to the rear of the choir is a modern circular chapel, and the church itself is a fine structure, built in the early Gothic style.

The ramparts around the town and pier form admirable promenades. The basse-ville, or lower town, is a pleasant walk on a fête day. The new light house should be visited. It is one of the most beautiful works of mechanism in the world. The view from the summit of the tower presents a panoramic scene of great beauty, comprising, on a clear day, the distant cliffs of England, and the outlines of Dover Castle. The public cemetery outside the town contains the ashes of Lady Hamilton (Nelson's Emma), who expired here, destitute and impoverished.

The railway from hence to Lille, enables passengers to proceed direct by rail to Brussels and all parts of Belgium; also to Douai and Paris—Travellers proceeding to Belgium or Germany will avoid much trouble by informing the authorities of their place of destination, and by what train they intend to proceed; their luggage should then be duly marked for transit, and they will avoid the annoyance of a custom-house search in France. Travellers with a foreign passport are subject to a visa, the expense of which is two francs. The British minister's passport is an exception, no charge being made for the visa.

Travellers not going to Paris, but en route to Brussels, need not exchange their passports for a passé provisoire, the visé of the Calais authorities only being necessary to enable them to proceed on their journey. The British consul here will grant a passport for 4s. 6d., to parties not provided with one.

The police signature to the passport can be procured at any hour of the day or night, and hence travellers should not be imposed upon by the commissionaries at the hotels, who will often endeavour to detain strangers, on the plea that the police signature cannot be procured. The owner of the passport should attend the police office himself to have it visé. English chapel, Rue des Prêtres; hours of service on Sundays 11 a.m. and 3 p.m.

Steamers ply thrice each day between Calais and Dover, making the voyage in about one and a half to two hours. Steam-boats sail direct to London twice a week, performing the voyage in from 10 to 12 hours.

Calais to Lille—45 English miles. Leaving the station at the end of the pier, near to the gate St. Pierre, a place of no importance is passed, and ARRAS arrived at. It is a small fortress situated on a canal. A little to the west of the road, between the town and Guisnes, is the spot called by historians the "Field of the Cloth of Gold," where Henry VIII. of England and Francis I. of France met in 1520. It is so called from the cloth of gold covering the tents and pavilions occupied by the two Monarchs and their suites, comprising 5,696 persons, with 4,325 horses.

ANDRUOG Station. WARREN Station.

St. Omer.—Hotels:

Hotel de l'Ancienne Poste, an old-established good house.

Hotel St. Katharine.

A third rate fortress, situated in a marshy district on the Aa, well built and strongly fortified; streets wide and well made. A plentiful supply of refreshing water is afforded from 12 fountains in different quarters. The Hôtel de Ville is situated in the Place d'Armes. Beyond the walls are two considerable suburbs, between which and Clairmarais are situated, amid extensive marshes, several floating islands, covered with trees and excellent pasture. The proprietors row them like a boat to land their cattle or take them up. The town is on the line of railway from Calais to Lille. Living is said to be cheap. It contains a population of 21,000 inhabitants, and possesses two ecclesiastical buildings well worthy of notice—the Cathedral, and Abbey Church of St. Bertin. The former is a magnificent construction, exhibiting a transition from the round to the pointed style of architecture, situated in the Rue St. Bertin. Its east end is of a polygonal termination, with projecting chapels. The interior of the church is in good preservation, and the small Chapel of the Virgin has been lately re-decorated. At the extreme end of the street in which this church is situated are to be seen the remains of the once famous Abbey of St. Bertin, formerly the noblest Gothic building in French Flanders. The only fragments now remaining is a stately tower, noble even in its ruins, the mutilated panneling of its walls bespeaking the chaste and superior elegance of its florid Gothic style of ornament. From off the tower, which is propped by a rude buttress of masonry, a fine panoramic view of the town may be had. Thomas à Becket sought refuge in this once-famous abbey, when a fugitive from England, and within its cloister were passed the last four years of his life; by Childeric III., the last of the rois fainéants of the Merovingian race, who died there in 754. The monastery was suppressed in 1792, but was spared by the convention. The Directory was less considerate, and under it the roof was taken off, the building stripped of its fixtures and wood work, which were sold. The work of destruction was completed a few years since by the local authorities, who had the walls taken down, in order to find work for some unemployed labourers!

It was here existed the celebrated Jesuits' College, founded in 1596 by an English Jesuit, named Parsons. In it were educated many of the conspirators mixed up in the Gunpowder Plot, and some of the wild spirits that intrigued against Elizabeth. This college was succeeded by a seminary, for British Roman Catholics, and in it was educated the famous agitator, the late Daniel O'Connell.

English Church: Rue du Bon Pasteur. Hours of Service 11 a.m. and 3 p.m. on Sundays.

EBLINGHEM Station.

HAZEBROUCK: From here a branch line leads to Dunkirk. Refreshments may be had here.

The following unimportant stations are next passed:—STRAZELLE, BAILLEUL, STENWERCK, ARMISTIERES, and PERENCHIES.

Lille.—Hotels:

Hotel de l'Europe, the first in the town, and highly recommended. Landlord, M. Ferras.

Hotel de Bellevue and Commerce.

There is also a refreshment room at the railway station, but it is not very good.

This city is strongly fortified, and forms, on the northern frontiers of France, the central point of defence. With a population of 72,630 inhabitants, it is the seat of thriving industry and of busy manufacture, ranking as the seventh industrial and commercial city of the new empire. The town is traversed by the waters of the Haute and Basse Deule, which fill its moats, and work the mill machinery about. They are connected by a canal, so arranged as to be able to inundate the country for one and a half mile around the walls, if necessary. Though the city is surrounded and its wealth very great, yet its monuments and buildings are few and unimportant.

The Châtel is looked upon as a master specimen of the skill of Vauban, who held the position of governor for many years. The Hôtel de Ville is an erection of the 13th century, built by Jean Sans-Peur, inhabited by Charles V., and was anciently the palace of the Dukes of Burgundy. The building is in the early Gothic style, and has in one of its tourelles an exquisitely groined staircase and a chapel. A school of art, containing an interesting and rich collection of drawings by the old masters, occupies one division of the building. This collection consists of 44 paintings by Raphael some by Massaccio Fra Bartolomeo and a few architectural designs by Michael Angelo. An inspection of them will interest and gratify all lovers of the fine arts. Chev'r Wicar bequeathed them to the city. Though Sunday is the only day on which there is a public admission, the housekeeper will not hesitate to admit persons of respectability on other days.

The Museum will scarcely repay a visit; it, however, contains many curious old portraits of the Dukes of Burgundy and of the Counts of Flanders, besides a painting by Rubens, and two by Arnold de Vues, a native artist, born in 1642, and considerably eminent in his profession. The former painting represents St. Catherine rescued from the wheel of martyrdom, and the two latter are portraits of Saints Francis and Cecilia.

The chief church in Lille is that of St. Maurice, a Gothic building of the 16th century, resting on delicately light pillars, but presenting no appearance of general interest. The Rue Royale, a street one mile long, should be visited, and the immensely large corn stores seen, as also the very fine houses of the Rue Esquimoise.

The suburbs of Lille for miles around, as well as the entire Department du Nord, will strike the traveller as strongly resembling the districts through Lancashire and the West Riding. On all sides is heard the busy hum of industry, whilst tall chimneys and numerous mills proclaim the active and vigorous trade being carried on, forming the rather novel combination of a fortress and a manufacturing town. Flax forms the staple manufacture, which is grown in and about the adjacent country. It is spun into ordinary thread, and twisted into Lille thread. Cotton spinning is also carried on to a considerable extent, and in its manufacture Lille has been a considerable rival to England. Its other branches of trade are the manufacture of sugar from beet-root, the extraction of oils from coals and the seeds of rape, poppies, linseed, &c. Its other objects of attraction are the Hospital, founded in 1739, the Bridge, the Concert Hall, the Gaol, the Botanical Garden, the Triumphal Arch, erected in 1782, in honour of Louis XIV., and the Column raised in memory of the siege sustained by the city in 1792. Railway to Douai and Paris; to Valenciennes, Mons, and Brussels; to Courtray, Ghent, and Brussels.

Lille to Brussels, by Douai and Valenciennes.—SECLIN, CARVIN, and LE-FORCET stations, places of no interest or importance, are passed before arriving at

DOUAL.—Hotel:

Hôtel de Flandre, the best.

Refreshment Room at the station, very good.

Population, 17,600. The town is conveniently situated on the river Scarpe, which communicates with the canal of Sensé, and is surrounded by fortifications, which the railway twice crosses. An old detached fort on the left bank serves as a defence for the town, which belongs to département du Nord. It has a very picturesque Relfrey in the market place, surmounting the Hôtel de Ville, a gothic building of the 15th century, in which is the library, containing 30,000 vols. A rather curious spectacle greets the traveller's eyes here in the early part of each July, when a procession takes place called Géant Gayant, a large oler giant, 30 feet high, attired in armour, and accompanied by a family of proportionate size, consisting of his wife and children, perambulate the streets, accompanied by the populace. Eight men enclosed within this giant fabric move it. Douai has been famed for its college, founded by Cardinal Allen in 1569. In it Roman Catholic priests for England and Ireland have been educated. Daniel O'Connell also studied here. A good trade in flax is carried on. Here the Great Northern Railway divides into two branches, the one proceeding to join the Belgian Railways by Valenciennes; the other by Arras and Amiens to Paris.

MONTIGNY, SOMAIN, WALLERS, and RAMBES stations are passed previous to our arrival at

VALENCIENNES.—Hotels:

Hotel de Commerce, the only good house in town.

Population, 22,000. A place of considerable trade and wealth; situated on the Great Northern Railway; also strongly fortified by its position on the Scheldt, at its confluence with the Rhendelle, by which it may be surrounded for three-fourths of its circumference by water, retained by means of sluices in the fortifications. The town is well built; the houses are generally of brick and white stone. The Hotel de Ville, in which the Gothic style is mingled with several orders of architecture, will claim attention; it is highly decorated the handsome façades surmounted by an attic, adorned with Cariatide figures, representing the four seasons. The hospital and the theatre are also remarkable. Many agreeable promenades will be found—the Cours-Bourbon, the Place-Verte, the Embankment between the city and the suburbs, the circuit of the outer fortifications from the Mons Gate to the Quennoy Gate, the Faubourg Cambrail. From the Citadel the valley of the Scheldt is seen to advantage. Froismart, the historian of the 14th century, was born here. Here passports must be delivered up by travellers entering France. The tourist will not find much to gratify his taste or fancy in the country about here, which is non-picturesque in the extreme, and altogether undiversified with any tracts of wood or water scenery.

VALENCIENNES TO BRUSSELS, see page 4

Lille to Brussels (via Mouscron, Courtray, Ghent, and Malines).—83½ English miles.

ROUBAIX, an industrious and manufacturing town, which has lately risen into great importance and still continues to increase in population and trade. It has a population of 25,000. Its staple trade is cotton manufacture. Close to it, the English, under the Duke of York, suffered a severe defeat from the French, commanded by Pichegru, on May 18, 1794. They lost, in that sanguinary affray, 1000 killed, 2000 prisoners, and 60 cannon.

Toucoure (7½ miles from Lille), a town with 20,000 inhabitants, no ways remarkable in its general appearance, but famed for its manufacture of table linen.

Mouscron, 11 miles from Lille, is seen on an eminence to the right with its beautiful church built of bricks. Its chief importance arises from the fact of its being situated on the frontier. It is the chief place of its commune, and contains a population of 5538 souls. The country about is rich and well cultivated, producing wheat and rich pastures. Passports and baggage are examined at this station. Facing Mouscron, to the left, is the village of Luinquies. Here (Junction of the railway from Tournay) a change of carriage takes place and an examination of luggage. Travellers for Brussels, via Jurbise, also to Namur, should take especial care and get into the proper train. From this station the railway proceeds on through a beautiful country, until its arrival at Courtray, on nearing which the country appears highly cultivated, and picturesquely agreeable.

COURTRAY—(Inns: Lion d'or and Poste)—in Flemish Kortryck, is a fortified town, and the chief place of a judicial and administrative district of West Flanders. It is situated on the Lys, which divides it into two parts, securing to it a communication with the principal towns in the north of France. Its population is 25,500. The streets are large, and finely built. Under the name of Cortorlacum it existed in the time of the Romans. The first cloths were made here in 1288, and two hundred years afterwards it contained 6,000 weavers. In 1312, Philip of Burgundy carried away a celebrated clock, considered at that time one of the wonders of the age, and the two figures (Jacquemart and his wife) which struck the hours. The regularity of the motions of these latter gave rise to a proverb which still exists in Courtray, when speaking of the love existing between a couple, "They agree like Jacquemart and his wife." It is still famous for its manufacture of table linen and other damask, with which it supplies all parts of Europe. The surrounding country is noted for its growth of flax, with which it supplies, not alone its own manufactories, but many of the markets of Europe. In the neighbourhood are large and extensive bleaching-grounds. The flax is steeped in the waters of the Lys, esteemed peculiarly favourable for bleaching purposes.

In a plain near Courtray, was fought, in 1302, the sanguinary battle of the Golden Spurs, between the French troops, under the Count d'Artois, and the Flemish under John, Count of Namur, in which the former were totally defeated, and the Count d'Artois and the Constable of France, together with upwards of twelve hundred knights, and several thousand men, left dead on the field. The battle derived its name from the immense number (700) of the gilt spurs, worn by the knights, which fell into the hands of the victors. To the right of the road is seen a small chapel, erected in 1831 to commemorate the event. It is outside the Porte de Gand, and marks the centre of the battle field.

The public buildings and monuments of Courtray are not numerous. We will describe shortly the principal.

Hôtel de Ville: the interior possesses two chimneys, one placed in the police court or hall, the other in the council room; their sculpture is of exquisite delicacy and highly finished, and worthy of attention.

Church of Saint Martin: this church was founded about the year 650 by Saint Eloi. It is remarkable for the tower (one of the loftiest in Belgium) which surmounts the portico. There is a tabernacle in the interior, most admirably sculptured, and a picture by Vleirick, a painter of the 16th century, representing the "Descent of the Holy Spirit upon the Apostles," and on the two wings "The Sleep of Adam in Paradise," and "The Baptism of Christ." There is another picture by Van Manderen, the historian and poet, representing "A scene of Martyrdom at Rome." The rich ornaments made use of in Divine worship are worthy of notice for the beauty of the chasing and engraving.

Notre Dame: this church is worthy of notice, chiefly from the richness of its marbles. It was founded in 1238 by Baldwin, Count of Flanders and Emperor of Constantinople. It deserves to be visited on account of the richness and grandeur of its ornaments, particularly a chef-d'œuvre of Van Dyck, placed behind the high altar, and representing the Elevation of the Cross. The tabernacle, a fine piece of carving, by the famous Lefevre, of Tournay; two bas-reliefs by Godecharles; and Christ at the Tomb, deserve to be noticed. This church once possessed the small ivory statue of the Virgin, known as the Virgin of Oroningen, celebrated for the miracles which, according to many, it performed: it is now in the church of Saint Michael, and still attracts crowds of pilgrims to its shrine. The two towers, called Breien-Torren, built in 1413, are remarkable for the extreme strength and thickness of the walls; they are united by a bridge over the Lys, built in the year 1468.

The Market Houses are seen in all their ancient simplicity in the centre of the town; the front of the building is adorned by five elegant turrets. There was formerly a high tower in the centre of the structure, in which the celebrated clock previously mentioned was placed. A modern building has been erected for market purposes.

Theatre: this is remarkable for the beauty of its decorations; it forms part of the new market building.

The Gallery of Paintings is but of recent establishment, and contains as yet but a small collection of ancient and modern works; the liberality of its members, however, promises soon to add rare and valuable productions to its gallery. The collection of the late M. Goethals-vercruysse, consisting of books, pictures, and interesting objects of natural history, should be seen.

Promenades: the ramparts or boulevards surrounding Courtray form a fine walk, from which may be had a beautiful view of the city. The park of Saint George is likewise a delightful place; but by far the most agreeable of the public walks is the esplanade; it is planted with chestnut and lime trees, and has nicely laid out plots of green, furnished here and there with elegant and comfortable seats. Railway to Bruges; also to Ypres.

Leaving Courtray for Ghent, the railway runs parallel to the paved road, and after a short run arrives at HAELEBEKE, a commune and chief place of a canton in the district of Courtray, containing a population of 4,000 souls. It was the oldest town in Flanders, and the residence of the first governors of the country. Antiquities have frequently been found here. The church is remarkable for its architecture, and contains a superb pulpit, a master-piece of Decreux, of Tournay.

WÆRREGHEN is an important and ancient commune of the district of Courtray; population, 6,800. It has a considerable trade in linen. Situated 4 miles north-west of it, is the village of Roosbeke, remarkable as the spot where Philip Van Artevelde, the brewer of Ghent, suffered defeat by the French in 1382, losing his own life, with 20,000 of his countrymen. Shortly after leaving Wæregghem, the railroad crosses the stype, and, quitting West Flanders, enters into

Page 6.

Place de l' Hôtel de Ville, Courtray.

Page 6.

Council Hall, Courtray.

Page 7.

Hôtel de Ville, Oudenarde.

✱

East Flanders, passes Zulte, a town containing | Ghent.—Hotels:

~~Street 2 to 2nd. Place d'Armes highly recom-~~

4

4

and Flanders, passes Zulte, a town containing 200 inhabitants, and arrives at Deynze, after passing in a right line, passing Olsene and then Ghent; the former a commune of the district of Ghent, with a population of 2,600, and the latter a town of the same district, containing a population of 2,100 inhabitants.

Deynze is situated on the left bank of the Lys, in the opposite bank, between the road and the river, is Peteghem, a small commune containing 400 souls. Deynze is the chief place of a canton in the district of Ghent, and an ancient town; its population is 3,800. The principal church, Notre Dame, is an old gothic building, containing a fine picture, attributed to Jordaens, representing the birth of Christ. There are coaches for Thielt and Oudenarde. The former is the chief place of a canton in the district of Bruges. It is the birthplace of Oliver le Daim, the celebrated master of Louis XI. Population 12,000. Oudenarde is of very ancient origin; great numbers of medals of the Gauls and first Kings of France have been found here. The Town Hall is a handsome Gothic building; the fountain and park opposite are worthy of attention. The portal of the collegiate church of the burgo-master and aldermen is a masterpiece of wood carving, executed in 1530 by Paul Vander Schelder. The trade in linen is extensive. The population is 5,500. The Lys, which passes Deynze, rises in France, in the department of the Pas de Calais, not far from Bethune; after watering Aire, Estaires, and Armentieres, it takes a north-easterly direction, a little below the latter town, and forms the limit between France and Belgium, by Warneton and Wervick, which it passes, and entering West Flanders, passes Courtray, then enters East Flanders, near Olsene, crossing Deynze, and taking a winding course of about 100 miles, it falls into the Scheldt, at Ghent.

NAZARETH is next met with. Leaving here the railroad passes Maria Leerne, and enters a very interesting place, to the right of which meanders the river Lys. St. Dennis Western is passed to the left; the road leading to the village of Oudenarde is next crossed by the railway, after which it turns suddenly to the left, and leaving the line leading to Brussels, arrives at Ghent.—Hotels:

Hotel de la Poste, Place d'Armes, highly recommended to English families.

Hotel Royal, Place d'Armes, in the centre of the town, an excellent house.

Hotel de Flandre, a very good house, and charges moderate.

Tourists will find a large stock of ready-made wearing apparel, of the best fashion, at T. B. Collard's, 16, Rue des Champs, and at most reasonable prices. Orders are promptly executed, which is a great consideration.

The traveller will be most agreeably surprised on entering this rich and populous city, to observe the animation and activity imparted by the flourishing state of its manufactories. Its population of 90,000 persons is chiefly engaged in the manufacturing of linen and cotton threads by machinery, and the bleaching and printing of calicoes. On the accession of the present dynasty, the good folks of Ghent predicted an immediate declension of their trade, and a general reverse of prosperity, as the inevitable results of the separation from Holland. We are happy to learn that the prophecy has proved false in every respect, and that its trade is increasing and flourishing now more than ever. This circumstance is explained by a consideration of the fact, that the reigning king is not the patron and protector of particular interests, but the promoter of good to the whole nation, governing constitutionally by a cabinet possessing the confidence of its parliament, and composed of men representing the interests, and conversant with the wants and necessities of the agricultural, commercial, manufacturing, and mineral branches of Belgian industry; hence there is a more general prosperity throughout the land—and, if the city of Ghent no longer monopolizes the manufacturing trade of Belgium, it is satisfactory to know, that the great centres of population, Antwerp, Liège, Brussels, Namur, and Verviers, were never in a more flourishing state than at present. Ghent, though no longer the great commercial city of former days, is still the Manchester of Belgium. In 1800 an enterprising Fleming, named Liviere Bancus, brought over from Manchester several English workmen and spinning-jennies; manufactures quickly took root, and in a short time 30,000 workmen were employed, 60 steam-engines required to set in motion the machinery of the various cotton mills, many of whose chimneys appear like classic columns.

The political history of Ghent is various and interesting. Notwithstanding the severe strictures of the historian Hallam, it calls up to the recollection many scenes which inspire us with every sentiment of sympathy and good-will towards the descendants of many a name illustrated in centuries past, by deeds of patriotism and domestic virtue, which still do honour to the Flemish character.

Ghent is one of the handsomest towns on the Continent; its streets and public squares are wide and spacious; it has more the appearance of a modern city than Bruges; and there are a number of elegant and dashing equipages constantly rolling through its busy thoroughfares. Its objects of attraction may be enumerated as follows:—

The Beffroi.—Belfry tower, a building erected in 1183. Permission to erect a tower, or Belfry, was the earliest privilege that the citizens obtained from their feudal lords, and was, hence, long regarded by them as a monument of their power and wealth. It originally served as a watch tower, from whence an enemy could be descried, and in which was a tocsin-bell that called the citizens to arms, and to debate. The gilt dragon on the top was carried off from Bruges, by the Gantoises as a trophy of their conquest of that town, under Philip Vlaenderlaet. It has lately been re-gilt. Its history is rather a remarkable one, it having originally adorned a Greek church at Constantinople, from whence it was carried off by the men of Bruges, who went to the first crusade as soldiers under Baldwin, Count of Flanders. It is now used as a prison and had deposited in the lower part of it, not long since the title deeds and records of Ghent. From its top a magnificent view can be had, and the entrance to it lies through the shop of a watchmaker, who charges 2 francs for admission. The following reply was made by Charles V. to his cruel and atrocious minister, Alva, who advised him to destroy the city, “combien il fallait de peaux d’Espagne pour faire un gant de cette grandeur?”—(How many skins of Spanish leather would it take to make such a glove?) Thus spoke the king, pointing out the city from the top of the Belfroi.

The Cathedral of Ghent is one of the handsomest gothic buildings in Belgium. It was formerly a church dedicated to St John, but took the name of St. Bavon in 1540, when Charles V. removed thither the collegiate chapter of the Abbey of that saint, and 19 years afterwards it was raised to the dignity of a cathedral church. The present building was commenced in the thirteenth, and finished in the beginning of the sixteenth century. The majestic effect which the structure is calculated to produce is much impaired by the want of an open area around and in front. The tower is remarkable for its elegance; it is 271 feet high, and the ascent to the platform which terminates it is by 446 steps; the view from the summit is of great extent and beauty. The Cathedral itself is divided into three aisles by a double range of light and elegant columns. On each side are disposed twelve chapels, which, as well as the choir, are in excellent keeping with the rest of the building. The choir, which has two side aisles, is raised above the floor of the body of the church by a flight of steps: in front is the grand altar, enclosed by three bronze doors of elaborate workmanship, and surmounted by Corinthian columns of the purest Carrara marble, with a statue of the saint in his ducal robes, and two colossal marble statues by Van Poucke, representing the apostles Peter and Paul. In front of the altar are four tall copper candelsticks remarkable as having been the property of Charles the First of England. It is surmised that they may have adorned the Chapel of Whitehall, or St. Paul's Church. It is supposed that they were sent out of England and sold; on them are still seen the arms of England.

The stalls of the canons in the choir are said to be the finest specimens of carving in mahogany known to exist in the world. Over these stalls are eleven paintings in imitation of bas-relief, by P. Van Reysschoot. Most of the numerous chapels which line the Cathedral are adorned with paintings. The first contains the Beheading of St. John the Baptist, by Crayer; the second, the Donation of St. Colette (a saint of Ghent, who died in 1447,) of a piece of ground for a convent, by Paelinck, a modern artist; the third, the Baptism of our Saviour, by Crauwer; the fourth, a dead Christ, by Abraham Janssens; the sixth, Christ disputing with the Doctors, by Pourbus, all the figures of which are portraits of different individuals holding official situations under Philip II.; the seventh, a fine picture of the Martyrdom of St. Barba, by Crayer; the tenth, a Christ between the Thieves, by Vander Meulen

Page 9.

Church of St. Nicholas, Ghent.

Page 10.

St. Peter's Church, Ghent.

Page 10.

Hôtel de Ville, Ghent.

a pupil of Van Eyck; the eleventh, the Paschal Lamb, one of the most celebrated pictures of the Flemish school, painted by the brothers Van Eyck, the inventors of oil-painting; and, though more than 400 years have elapsed since this picture was painted, the colours retain a vividness truly wonderful, the numerous figures are all finished with the most elaborate care, and each countenance is endued with admirably appropriate expression. The towers, which in the luminous horizon are supposed to represent the New Jerusalem, are taken from those of Maestricht, near which town the artists were born. Above this picture are three smaller ones by the same artists; the centre represents Christ on a throne, holding a crystal sceptre, surmounted by a large sapphire; the transparency of the crystal is represented with an effect almost magical: the left-hand picture is an exquisite representation of the Virgin, and that on the right is an equally fine figure of St. John the Baptist. These four pictures, whether considered with reference to the date of their execution, or to their intrinsic merit, must rank among the most valuable in Europe. In the fourteenth chapel is a fine picture by Rubens, representing the Reception of St. Amand in the Abbey of St. Bavon, after he had given all his property to the poor. The fifteenth contains the Resurrection of Lazarus, by Otto Vennius, the master of Rubens, and also Judas Maccabeus seeking a place of Burial for his Soldiers. In the sixteenth is the Martyrdom of St. Lieven, the patron of Ghent, by Seghers. The seventeenth has a copy from Rubens's picture of the Martyrdom of St. Catharine, the original of which is in the church of St. Catharine, at Lille. In front of this chapel is the mausoleum of Bishop G. Van Eersel, executed by Charles Van Pouche and F. Janssens, after the designs of the former. The nineteenth chapel contains the Seven Works of Mercy, by Coexie; in the twentieth is the font in which Charles V. was baptised; the twenty-first has the Assumption of the Virgin, by Crayer; in the twenty-second is one of the finest productions of Crayer, representing St. Machaire praying for the cessation of the plague; before the altar is a bas-relief in white marble, by M. Portois, representing the body of St. Machaire carried in procession. The altar-piece of twenty-third chapel represents St. Lambert carrying burning coals on an unconsumed surplice to St. Sandoalt;

this picture is by Van Huffel; the twenty-fourth and last chapel contains a Descent from the Cross, by Bombata, which is esteemed the finest production of that artist. The organ has a fine tone and delights the ear, but is placed in a situation which offends the eye, from interfering with the harmony of the construction of the rest of the edifice. The pulpit, which is the workmanship of Lawrence Delvaux, of Ghent, is in the centre of the right nave, and is considered one of the most beautiful in the world. It is composed of white marble and oak. The tree of life supports the pulpit, and covers the sounding-board with its branches. At the foot of the tree is seated a figure of Time, represented as a venerable old man, whose eyes are covered with a thick veil, which he is lifting up in order to contemplate the features of Truth, who presents herself before him as a beautiful woman, holding an open book, in which are traced the words "Surge qui dormis Illuminabit te Christus," "Arise thou that sleepest, Christ shall give thee light." At the foot of each stair-case are two angels. The four fronts of this exquisite piece of workmanship, which cost 37,000 florins (£2,960), are ornamented with bas-reliefs in white marble.

The most perfect work of art in this cathedral, or indeed in the whole of Belgium, is the mausoleum of Bishop Triest, by Jerome Duguesnoy; it consists of a statue of the bishop contemplating the cross borne by our Saviour. On the opposite side is a figure of the Virgin, and two small angels are stationed at the bottom of the mausoleum.

The visitor should not leave St. Bavon without descending into the crypt, a low subterranean arch under the choir. It is divided into five chapels, adorned with paintings, and containing the tombs of Hubert Van Eyck and his sister also a painter, who might be reckoned an enthusiast in the art, as she rejected all offers of marriage, in order to devote herself entirely to its study.

The Church of St. Nicholas is one of the most ancient in Ghent. It was burned in 1120, but re-built on the same plan. This edifice suffered much in the religious wars. The church of St. Pierre is a building of the seventeenth century. It is approached through a beautiful square, and contains a few good paintings.

The Church of St. Michael in the centre of the city, is remarkable for the elegance and lightness of its architecture, which is seen to advantage from the open space in which it is situated. The square tower which surmounts the church, was begun in 1440, and was to have been carried to a height of 400 feet, but the design has never been completed. In the twelfth chapel of this edifice, is a magnificent picture of the crucifixion, by Van Dyck, the only work of this master which is to be found in any of the public buildings of Ghent. Each of the chapels, which are twelve in number, contains one or more pictures of various merit: it will be sufficient to direct the attention of the amateur to the Annunciation, by Lens, and the Assumption, by François, both in the newly finished chapel, to the right of the cross of the church; the Apotheosis of St. Catherine in the third chapel, by Crayer, and the Finding of the Cross, by the Empress Helena, whose figure, represented in the picture, was furnished by the Empress Josephine, who sat for the model. There are also in this church, numerous paintings, by Belgian artists. The organ recently erected in this church is remarkable for its sweetness. The other principal churches worth visiting are those of Saint Pierre, St. Nicholas, and St. Jacques; this latter church is situated in a vast square. It was destroyed in 1720 and afterwards rebuilt.

The Béguinage. The community of Béguines was founded by St. Bagge, Duchess of Brabant, and sister of Philip of Landen. The community is peculiar to the Netherlands. Clement V. issued a bull against these sisters, but John XXII. revoked it, and accorded them many indulgences. It is one of the few nunneries not swept away by the fury of the French revolution, or suppressed by Joseph II. Their existence received a legal ratification in 1826. The sisters are bound by no vow, and may return to the world at any time. Their chief duty is to attend to the sick and visit the hospitals, where they are constantly to be met with. In the order are persons of the highest families and wealth. The sisters in Ghent amount to about one hundred, whilst their entire number in Belgium is six thousand. The building is of considerable extent, with streets, squares, and gates, enclosed by a wall and moat. The house at Ghent, called the Grand Béguinage, is situated in the Rue des Bruges, and was founded by Jane, Countess of Constantinople, in 1234. The first chapel was built in 1242. The sisters live in separate houses, and each door has inscribed on it the name of some saint, chosen as its protectress. Visitors to Ghent should visit this church at the hour of vespers, which are sung half-past seven each evening. The scene is most impressive. The sisters are all dressed in black robes with white veils; the novices are distinguished by a different dress, whilst those who have but lately taken the veil, are distinguishable by a chaplet, which they wear around their heads. The chapel, barely illuminated by a few lamps, and the solemn singing, together with the large assemblage of sisters, so picturesquely dressed, imparts to the scene an aspect of solemn grandeur and mystic beauty that cannot fail to impress the mind of the beholder with feelings of awe and reverence, such as are only felt in the presence of objects interesting and sublime. The chapel itself is interesting in the extreme, and the stone work of one of its pillars, was inscribed the following touching inscription by Lamartine:

“.....Un peu de baume à la Souffrance
Au corps quelque remède, aux âmes l'espoir;
Un secours au malade, aux parents un adieu,
Un Sourire à chacun, à tous un mot de Dieu.”

Hôtel de Ville is situated partly in the R. Haute-Porte, and partly in La Marché-an-Bœu. The portion standing in the former street built in the Gothic style of architecture, presents a magnificent appearance, and is adorned with exquisitely wrought ornaments. It has two façades, built at intervals between 1482 and 1600 after several plans, by as many architects. The turret or tribune at the corner, was built in 1615 by Eustace Polleyn, and is in the rich flamboyant Gothic style. The other façade, between 1600 and 1620, has columns of the different orders of architecture, one surmounting the other. In the Salle du Trône, so celebrated in the annals of Ghent, was signed the treaty known as the “Pacification of Ghent,” drawn up in 1576, by the congress of confederates, who assembled to adopt measures calculated to drive the Spaniards from out of Belgium. Two modern paintings are to be seen in the interior of the building, which will not elicit very much admiration. Palace of Justice.—A striking building. Rôlants, is situated in the Rue du Théâtre. The ground floor is used as the Exchange, and the upper chamber as Courts of Justice.

Palais de L'Université—Founded by William

Page 11. La Halle aux Draps, Ghent.

Page 11. Maison des Bateliers, Ghent

Page 7. Council Hall of Oudenarde.

Page 14. Cathedral of Mechlin

1

2

I., King of Holland, in 1826. It is a beautiful and modern edifice, having a splendid Corinthian portico, modelled from the Pantheon, at Rome, and is built on the site of the Jesuits' College. The principal hall, and the amphitheatre, in which the académie meetings are held, can accommodate from sixteen to seventeen hundred people, and is richly ornamented and embellished.

The Museum of Natural History is not less remarkable for its extent than for the richness of its collection. The university contains a library open to the public each day from nine to twelve and from two to five o'clock, unless on Sundays, and feast-days. This library contains sixty thousand volumes, and very many precious manuscripts. The Jardin Botanique, instituted in 1797, belongs to the university, and is spoken of as one of the finest in Belgium. It contains a collection of eight thousand plants, of a thousand different species.

Maison des Bateliers, on the Quai aux Herbes, is an old and picturesque edifice, built in 1513.

The La Halle aux Draps will also repay notice.

Maison de Detention, a house of correction, situated on the north side of the city, on the Coupures canal, which is bordered by a double row of large trees. It was constructed in 1773, in the reign of Maria Theresa, and forms a perfect octagon, in the centre of which is a spacious court, communicating with the different quadrangles of the establishment. Each quadrangle or ward has a yard, and in the centre of that belonging to the female ward, is a large basin of water, in which the female prisoners wash the linen of the whole establishment. Each prisoner sleeps alone in a small, but well-aired room, and is employed during the day in working at whatever trade or business he or she is most competent to; and of the produce of this labour, five-tenths are retained by government when the prisoners are merely detained correctionally; six-tenths when they have been sentenced to hard labour. The remainder is divided into two portions; half is given to the prisoners weekly for pocket money, and the other given to them at the expiration of the term of their imprisonment, to assist in their re-establishment in the world. Religious service and instruction are provided and attended to in an admirable manner; and if prisoners are found ignorant of the first elements of knowledge, as reading, writing, and arithmetic, they receive instruction in the various branches. Insubordination or refractory conduct is punished by solitary confinement. The shop for refreshments sold to the prisoners, is kept under strict regulations by the officers of the establishment, and the profits are employed as rewards for the most industrious and well-behaved prisoners. The new part of the building, which has been recently completed, has cost upwards of £40,000 and the whole edifice will, when finished, contain two thousand, six hundred prisoners. There is still, however, much to be done.

Le Kauter, or Place d'Armes, is a large square planted with trees. It is a beautiful promenade, and has a military band usually playing there on summer evenings.

The Marché au Vendredi (Vrijdays market), a vast square, so called from the day on which the fair is held. It is remarkable as having been the spot where the traders' unions of the middle ages planted their standards and rallied to arms. On it the ceremonial of inaugurating the Counts of Flanders was celebrated with a gorgeous and luxurious grandeur, unequalled at the present day. This spot is also identified with one of the most painful and tragic reminiscences connected with the history of Ghent. It is celebrated as being the scene of an internecine slaughter, in which fifteen hundred citizens were slain by fellow citizens. The weavers and fullers constituted the two factions, and the former were led on and headed by Jacques Van Artvelde, called the brewer of Ghent, in the corporation of which body he enrolled himself, though descended from one of the first families in Flanders. The day, to mark the sanguinary and disgraceful work, was called Evil Monday, in the annals of the town. On that spot, and on that day forty years after, Philip, the son of that Jacques, was saluted Protector of Ghent, and received the oath of fidelity from his townsmen on the occasion of his being called upon to lead them against Louis de Mâle. In the Marché au Vendredi also were lighted the fires of the Inquisition, under the duke of Alva. The great cannon, situated in a street called the "Manneken Aert," close to the Marché, is called De dulle Grute, alias Mad Margery, is the most enormous ever cast, measuring ten feet in length and ten and a-half feet in circumference. It is made of hammered iron, and was used in 1382 at the siege of Oudenarde, by the citizens of Ghent. An interesting monument of antiquity, stands in the Place St. Pharaïlde, near the Marché aux Poissons. It consists of an old turreted gateway, called the Oudeburg or the count's stone or castle, built in 863, by Baldwin Bras de fer. It is incorporated with a cotton factory now, and deserves a visit, as one of the oldest buildings in Belgium. In the year 1338, Edward III. and his family resided here. During his residence his queen gave birth to a son, called John of Gaunt. An intimate and friendly alliance existed for years between the English and people of Ghent. It may not be uninteresting to mention the fate of Jacques Van Artiveldt, the brewer, whom Edward III. of England used to style familiarly "his dear gossip." He was a faithful friend and ally to this king, and lost his life, it may be said, in his service. He invited Edward III. over to Sluys, in 1344, with a view of taking council for the promotion of the promise made to the king by Jacques, to the effect that he would make him "Lord and heritor of Flanders," a thing altogether opposed to the wishes of the Gantoises. Public indignation was excited against him, and was further increased by a rumour to the effect, that he had, during his administration of the government of Flanders, stealthily sent large sums of money out of the exchequer to England, which so exasperated the people, as to cause them to enter into a revolt against him, assault his house, which was attacked by a mob of 400 persons, and broken into, when a citizen, named Thomas O. Denny, slew him without mercy. Thus perished the man, by the hands of those citizens whom he once influenced, led, and governed; and whose sanguinary affrays were often undertaken in his desire to gratify the ambition or daring to which he ministered.

Portes de la Ville, or City Gates.—There are seven principal gates, the most remarkable of which are those of Brussels, St. Lievin, St. Peter, and Bruges, all of which present curious relics of the ancient gates erected in the fourteenth century. The greater portion of these gates have been re-constructed, after a style of beautiful architecture.

Casino.—Situated near the canal, cut in 1750, to unite the Lys and Bruges canal together. The botanical society and the musical society of St.

Cécily had this edifice constructed, in which might be held the reunions of the latter, and the floral exhibitions of the former.

Citadel.—Was erected by Charles V., and was the first thing of the kind raised in Belgium. It was called "Château des Espagnoles," and is situated on the east side of the town, not far from the Porte d'Anvers. In it were imprisoned the Counts Egmont, and Horn, and it was besieged in 1570, by the townspeople, under the Prince of Orange, when they rose to throw off the Spanish yoke. The Spaniards vigorously defended it, but three thousand Gantoises, wearing white shirts to distinguish them, assaulted it, and were repulsed, in consequence of the ladders being too short. The Spaniards capitulated next morning, after the attack, and terms being granted, the Senora Mondragon, who had bravely defended the fortress during her husband's absence, with about one hundred and fifty men, some women, and a few children, the sole remnant of the garrison, marched out, to the surprise of the victors.

Hospitals.—Ghent possesses one and twenty hospitals, civil and military. The principal of these is the Byloque, founded in 1225, and capable of containing six hundred sick. In the church attached to it, Jacques Van Artiveldt was buried. The military hospital is situated near the church of St. Martin, among beautiful gardens.

Theatre.—A magnificent theatre has been lately erected at the corner of the Place d'Armes. The salon, concert hall, and ball rooms are beautiful in their construction and decoration. It was erected at a cost of 2,500,000 francs.

Palais de Justice.—Situated in the Rue du Theatre, is a very fine building, and will repay notice.

The commerce and manufactures of Ghent are very extensive and various; the most in portance of the latter consist in cotton printing, cotton spinning, cloth working, gin distilling, sugar-refining, soap making, brewing, goldsmith's work, paper making, and numerous other branches of industry, particularly the making of masks, of which large quantities are exported all over the world. There is also a superb iron foundry in Ghent. Every day in the morning, at noon, and in the evening, a bell rings, to announce to the workmen, who amount in number to fifteen hundred and upwards, the hours of going to work.

Page 18.

Casino, Ghent.

Page 19

Theatre, Ghent.

Page 19.

Palais de Justice, Ghent.

While this bell is ringing, none of the bridges are allowed to be turned, lest they should intercept the passage of the industrious artisans.

The environs of Ghent are pleasant and fertile, abounding particularly in corn, flax, madder, and tobacco. Outside the gate of Courtrai, are numerous country houses, and the road is bordered with pleasure gardens. Near the Antwerp gates, are still to be traced, the ruins of the citadel constructed by Charles V., on the site of the abbey of St. Bavin; and in the neighbourhood of the gate of St. Lieven, is found a transparent stone, resembling the flints of Fleuris.

The fairs held at Ghent, commence on the 16th March, and continue for eighteen days; 10th July, seventeen days; 9th August, one day; and 8rd October, two days.

Post Office, Rue de l'Université.

A communication between the sea and Ghent exists by means of a canal, which enters the Schelde at Terneuse. This ensures all the advantages of a seaport to the city. Vessels drawing eighteen feet of water, can enter the basin. About fourteen miles north, at Sas van Ghent, are sluices, by means of which the entire country can be laid under water.

GHENT TO ANTWERP, see page 55.

Ghent to Mechlin.—Leaving Ghent, the railway, after crossing the Scheldt, is carried along the south side of it. The scenery is interesting, and such as usually characterises the environs of a great and populous city, until we arrive at MELLE—Situated on the Escaut, and containing a population of 1,900. The route from Brussels, to Ghent, and from Ghent to Mons by Grammont, traverses it. From this station to Wetteren, the line describes an immense curve, following the bend of the Escaut, on whose surface can be seen the boats as they sail up and down the river.

WETTEREN, is a charming village, or rather town, the capital of a canton situated to the right of the railway, on the right bank of the Escaut. It contains a population of about 1,000 souls. Leaving here the road crosses a viaduct, and passing along has to the left, the little villages of Cherscamp and Schelle-Belle, and arrives at Wichelen, after passing the Molenbuk, a stream flowing into the Escaut.

WICHELEN, is a small commune to the right of the railway, with a population of 4,000 inhabitants. This station is the point-d'arrêt for each train. On quitting this place, the railway proceeds through a rather uninteresting piece of country and arrives at AUDENHEM—(From here Alost is distant 3 miles). Omnibuses meet each train.

Alost, on the river Dendre, the chief town of the district of East Flanders, is said to owe its origin to a fortress built by the Goths in 411. It was formerly the capital of what was called Imperial Flanders, and was reduced to ashes by a conflagration in 1384, and in 1667 the celebrated Marshal Turenne took and dismantled it. The town hall is a fine Gothic edifice, built in 1210, and is in excellent preservation. The collegiate church of St. Martin was built by the same architect as the cathedral of Amiens, and contains a fine picture by Rubens, representing the "Plague of Alost." The population is about 15,000, chiefly engaged in linen, soap, and thread-lace manufactures.

TERMONDE, (Inns: Aigle; Demi-Lune) an ancient town, said to be earlier than the time of Charlemagne. It is situated at the mouth of the river Dendre, at its confluence with the Scheldt. The inhabitants have a taste for the fine arts, and the traveller may readily obtain access to several private collections, among which we may name those of M. Schellekin and Madame Terlinde. David Teniers married in this town, and resided here several years. The population is about 8,000, chiefly engaged in the hemp and flax trade. It is 16 miles, by railway west of Malines, and 19 from Ghent. The church of Notre Dame will repay a visit. It is a low, old building, surmounted by an octagon tower, and contains a Crucifixion and Adoration of the Shepherds, by Van Dyck, and a Virgin and Saints, by Crayer.

On leaving Termonde, we pass a great many pretty villages, of no note, and leaving East Flanders, arrive at MALDEREN, a commune containing 1,700 inhabitants, situated at the extremity of the province of Brabant. The town presents no remarkable objects of attraction save its church and a few curious monuments of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. The route through which we pass from here to Capelle, is no way interesting. Capelle-au-Bois is a little village of no importance. Leaving at a short distance from here the province of Brabant, we enter, at Hombeck, the province of Antwerp. Passing the ruins of the famous valley of Sellendael, we arrive at

Mechlin : (French Malines ; German, Mechelen ; Flemish, Michelen) Hotels :—

Hotel de la Grue, is an excellent house, well situated in the Grand Place, facing the cathedral. The landlord and waiters speak English.

Hôtel St. Jacques.

The Malines station is about five minutes walk from the town, which is one of the most picturesque Flemish cities. An obelisk is here erected, to mark the point where the various Belgic lines of railway diverge. The entrance from the railway station is fine.

Mechlin is a large town, in the province of Antwerp, divided by the Dyle into two parts. It is equidistant from Brussels, Antwerp, and Louvain, and contains a population of 25,000.

The streets are broad, and bordered in many places by good buildings.

The river Dyle passes through the town, and has an ebb and flow of tide for more than a league beyond Mechlin, in the direction of Louvain.

This town dates its origin as far back as the seventh century, and was long a subject of contention between the lords of Brabant and Flanders.

The lace produced at Mechlin is considered second only to that of Brussels, from which it differs principally in being made in a single piece, by means of bobbins, by which the entire patterns are produced at once, instead of being worked gradually by the hand, and hence it is stronger than the Brussels lace, though inferior to it in delicacy of workmanship.

The principal building of Mechlin is the cathedral, which is the metropolitan church of Belgium. It is dedicated to St. Rombauld, who was assassinated by the Pagans, in 755, in the chapel of St. Stephen, which stood near the site of the present edifice. The cathedral was commenced in the latter part of the twelfth century, but was not finished until the year 1513. The round tower, which surmounts the building, is almost entirely composed of buttresses, which give it, when seen from a distance, the appearance of a fragment of a colossal fluted column. It was commenced in 1452, from the funds supplied by the offerings of the pilgrims, who came in crowds to Mechlin, to share the advantages of the jubilee and general indulgence proclaimed by Pope Nicholas V., on the occasion of the war in the East, which however, terminated the very next year in the annihilation of the Eastern Empire, and the occupation of Constantinople by the Turks, under Mahomed. It was from this jubilee that the town acquired the name of "Malines l'heureuse," as it has since, from its great cleanliness, been named "Malines la propre." This tower is three hundred and fifty feet high, and has a dial plate of one hundred and forty-four feet in circumference. The view from the summit, over the surrounding country, is extensive, comprising the towns of Antwerp, Brussels, and Louvain. It was originally intended to surmount the tower by a vane of copper gilt, which would have increased the height nearly one-third, but the project has never been put into execution, and the tower remains unfinished. The alarm occasioned by the reflection of the moon on this tower which gives it the appearance of being on fire, was the origin of the proverb of the wise men of Mechlin, who try to extinguish the moon; the bare mention of which, to an inhabitant of the town, would even now, excite an irritation not easily to be appeased. The interior of the cathedral presents nothing worthy of notice, except the altar-piece, which is by Van Dyck; its subject is the Crucifixion. The exterior grand-front is ornamented with several statues, amongst them are Faith, Hope, Charity, and the Apostles. In the church of Notre Dame, behind the grand altar, is the Miraculous Draught of Fishes, painted by Rubens expressly for the Guild of Fishmongers, and considered one of his finest productions. In the same church are also a few fine pictures by Van Dyck. The traveller must take care not to confound this church with that called Notre Dame d'Hansloyek, which is remarkable for its beautiful cupola, and also for its carved pulpit, representing the temptation and fall of Adam and Eve. This church owes its origin to a miraculous image of the Virgin, which floated in a boat against the stream, until it arrived at the spot where the church now stands, when it approached the bank and remained firm; of course a sacred edifice to enshrine the image was immediately built; and equally of course, the image repaid the devotion of the inhabitants by performing numerous and stupendous miracles, which soon attracted pilgrims and offerings, sufficient to repay the expense to which they had put themselves. This purpose being answered, the image no longer thought it worth while to exert its miraculous powers to protect itself, and it was destroyed by sacrilegious hands, when the town was pillaged, as above mentioned. The church formerly belonging to the Jesuits, and still bearing their name, deserves attention for its handsome gothic front, and also for a series of paintings, forming a history of St. Francis Xavier, the Indian Missionary. In the church of St. John are four fine paintings, by Rubens, representing the Adoration of the Magi, the Birth of Christ the Descent from the Cross, and the Resurrection. The streets of Mechlin are wide and handsome, particularly that called Den Bruhl, in which is the splendid hotel belonging to the Commander of Pittsburg, of the Teutonic order. It was inhabited both by Louis XIV. and Louis XV. The magnificent garden is now open to the public. Near the Antwerp Gate is a small convent of Béguines, which deserves attention. In the chapel are some pictures worthy of notice.

Château des Espagnoles.

Station, Mechlin, or Malines.

View of Ostend.

Mechlin also possesses a college, a public seminary, the catholic university, as well as some societies for the cultivation of literature and the fine arts. The principal articles manufactured here, in addition to the lace which has been before mentioned, are leather, jewellery, all kinds of woollen and cotton stuffs, hats, combs, pins, oil of colza, and flax. There are also tan-yards, dyeing-houses, salt-refineries, and factories for all kinds of work in copper and tin. Considerable trade is likewise carried on in corn, oats, hemp, flax, colza, and hops. The Mechlin gingerbread, and the dish called déjeuner de Malines, composed of pigs' feet and ears, and acceptable presents to amateurs of such delicacies. John Bol, one of the earliest miniature painters, and Michael Coxie, an historical painter and pupil of Raphael, were natives of this town. The boulevards and ramparts afford pleasant walks, and are the general rendezvous of the townspeople. There are two fairs of fifteen days each, commencing the first Sunday after the 1st day of July, and the second on the 1st of October, for all kinds of merchandises; and on the Saint Saturday in October, is a well-frequented horse and cattle fair. The population is about 25,000.

On leaving this station for Brussels the rail crosses the Louvain Canal. On the east of the road between Malines and Vilvorde, is seen the chateau of Rubens at Stein, of which he was proprietor.

VILVORDE, a small, healthy town, of 5000 inhabitants, situated between Malines and Brussels. It is one of the most ancient in Belgium, and is much visited by philanthropists desirous of inspecting the great prison or penitentiary, built in the suburbs of the town. The church of Vilvorde contains some exquisite carvings in wood. In this town Tindal, the first English translator of the Bible, suffered martyrdom in 1536. At present this little town has acquired considerable reputation, from its possessing an excellent boarding-school for the education of young ladies; this establishment is conducted by Mademoiselles Squilliers, and the concurrent testimony of innumerable Protestant families represent it as being one of the best and most irreproachable institutions on the continent.

The route on leaving the last station takes in the view of many beautiful country seats, spread along the banks of the canal leading to Brussels. To the right, as we approach Brussels, is seen the Palace of Laeken, belonging to the King of the Belgians. This palace was originally built for the Austrian Governor of the Netherlands. It was afterwards inhabited by Napoleon, and is remarkable as being the place where he planned his Russian campaign. It is enclosed by magnificent gardens and a park, and is 3 miles from Brussels. A statue of Madame Malibran is erected in the cemetery at Laeken, where she is buried, her husband having brought her body from Manchester, at which place she died, to be interred here. The statue is a work by Guss, and is placed in a kind of temple. A beautiful and lengthy avenue of trees (l'allée verte) extends from Laeken to Brussels. The railroad traverses the opposite side of the canal and near the Botanical Gardens, opposite the Rue Neuve at the Porte de Cologne, enters Brussels, see page 31.

ROUTE 2.

Lille to Brussels—(via Mouscron, Tour-nay, Ath, and Jurbise).—Distance, 84 English miles.

Roubaix, Tournai, and Mouscron Stations.

described in previous route, at page 5, are first passed.

At the latter place travellers for Tournay change carriages, and luggage is examined.

Leaving Mouscron, we quit the line from that place to Lille, and find ourselves on the branch one leading to Tournay. To the left is Herseaux, at the extreme point of the frontier, rising to the south-east by the province of Hainault, into which the road enters, verging for some miles towards the French frontier. Leaving the village of Estampu's to the left, and that of Watreloos and its church to the right both the latter of which are in France, the road passes the hamlets of Pournette, Jonquières, and Estaimbourg, the capital of a commune, and arrives at Nechin, a place of no importance. The next station is TEMPELVEE, a town containing 3,000 inhabitants. As we approach Tournay we see to the right the village of Froyennes, the faubourg de Main, and the beautiful promenade of the Seven Sisters, all forming a splendid panorama. Advancing on, the railway crosses the Scheldt by a splendid viaduct of many arches. Look to the right; what an admirable entrance to the town. A beautiful coup d'œil is formed by the bridges, towers, houses, and rivers, all identified with some historical event. The terminus is approached, and we arrive at the station, on the Quay Escaut.

TOURNAY: Hôtel de Singe d'Or, the best. A Belgian city, in the province of Hainault. The town itself is indifferently built, and has a gloomy aspect: it contains a population of nearly 35 000, who are engaged in the manufacture of cotton and woollen stuffs. The workmen labour at home, instead of in factories. Of the public buildings that of the cathedral is the most celebrated: it is one of the most ancient and curious in the country. The internal ornaments are numerous. The choir is of a remarkably bold and striking nature; the pulpit is a gem, by Gillis, and the shrine of St. Eleu Marcus a masterpiece of workmanship in gold. There is also a beautiful gallery, by Lecroux, of Tournay; and four genii, the gems of the place, by Dequesnoy. The pictures are a Purgatory, by Rubens, and a Crucifixion, by Jordaens.

The Churches of St. Quentin St. Plat, and St. James, are interesting specimens of the primitive Gothic style. The Church of St. Nicholas de Chateau is of remarkable architecture, and possesses some fine pictures.

Henry VIII. captured Tournay in 1513, and bestowed it upon Cardinal Wolsey, who yielded it up to Francis I., and persuaded his royal master to sell the town to the French King, influenced by the promised interest of that monarch to obtain his elevation to the papacy.

The Public Library contains 20,000 volumes, and several curious manuscripts. The cabinet of natural history, in the museum at the Hotel de Ville, is worthy of notice.

Post Office, Rue Notre Dame.

Five miles south-east of Tournay, to the right of the post road to Ath, is the battle field of Fontenoy, seen immediately after passing the village of Bourguemembrays. In this spot was fought the battle between the English, Dutch and Austrians, commanded by the Duke of Cumberland, and French under Marshal Saxe.

Quitting Tournay, the following stations are met with, none of which is of any importance. Harmes, Bary Leuze, and Ligne. After which we arrive at ATH, (Inns: Cigne and Paon d'or) a fortified town on the Dendre, 21 miles from Tournay. A terrible fire in 1433, a hurricane in 1600, and an earthquake in 1691, and other disastrous events dismantled Ath of all her monuments, &c. St. Julien's Tower and the Parish Church alone escaped the conflagration. Ath sustained many deadly sieges. The fortifications constructed in 1815 are strengthened with great care. The population is about 9 000. At a short distance from Ath, on the Brussels post road, is Enghien, a town containing about 3,700 inhabitants. The beautiful park and gardens surrounding the chateau of the Duke D'Arenberg, destroyed during the French Revolution, deserve notice. At Meslin l'Evêque, near Ath, the cultivation of the mulberry and silkworm has been introduced with much success. The Belloel, 6 miles from Ath, not far from the road, is famous as the patrimonial estate of the Prince de Ligne,—illustrious in the triple capacity of diplomatist, soldier, and author.

Maffies, Attré, Brugellette, Lens stations, are next met with and are all places of no importance.

JURBISÉ, a small commune, with a population of 700 souls. It is about 8 miles from Mons by railway. The country along from Jurbisé to Braine-

Page 16.

Railway Station, at Tournay.

Page 16.

Cathedral, Tournay.

Page 16

Porch of the Cathedral.

le-Comte is rather interesting. Here there is a correspondence with the railway from Mons.

SOIGNIES (Hotels: De l'Ange; des Voyageurs; des Trois Rois) is the chief town of a canton of the province of Hainaut, in the district of Mons, with a population of 6,500 souls. Its origin is ancient. The church of St. Vincent is believed to be the most ancient in Belgium; from its shape, and by the style of architecture, it is certainly one of the most curious. The beautifully sculptured stalls are worthy of notice. The college of Soignies is one of the most renowned in Belgium: it is still well attended. The principal trade carried on is in the quarrying of the stone, known as that of Soignies.

Post Office, near the church.

BRAINE-LE-COMTE is a small ancient town of the province of Hainaut, in the district of Mons. It is said that Brennus, the Gaul, 391 years before Christ, founded a fortress and tower upon the site of the present church. The parish church is deserving of notice. The stone tabernacle at the choir is a fine piece of sculpture, but much disfigured with gilding and painting. The front of the convent of the Dominicans is an elegant structure. The principal hotel is du Cygne. The manufactures are chiefly cotton spinning and lace thread spinning. On the right the line turns off to Charleroi and Namur. Travellers proceeding direct to Namur and Liege change carriages at this station.

The surrounding district here is celebrated for the superiority of its flax, the best grown anywhere. It is employed in the manufacture of Brussels lace. To the north-west, a few miles distant is Steenkerke, the spot where the Duke of Luxembourg defeated William III., with a loss of 7,000 men, in 1692.

Quitting the last station, the railway pierces the tunnel of Braine-le-Comte, and enters a deep cutting, passing Heunuyres, a commune of the province of Hainaut; and La Genette, where Jean Jacques Rousseau died in 1741, after which it arrives at TUPIN, a commune in the district of Nivelles, in the province of Brabant, with a population of 2,500 souls.

LEMBREQ: a town containing 2,300 inhabitants, with no objects of interest save its old chateau and its numerous distilleries. Nothing worth notice presents itself after leaving the Tubise station. Crossing the Senne and the canal Charleroi, the next station arrived at is HAL (Hotel des Pays Bas) a small but pretty village of 5,000 inhabitants, built partly on the Senne, and partly on the canal Charleroi. It has no objects of particular interest, save the church of St. Mary, celebrated as possessing a miracle-working image of the Virgin. It is of wood, two feet high, and has acquired immense wealth by pious offerings, including gold plate given by Charles V., Maximilian I., Pope Julius II., &c. A side chapel contains thirty-three cannon balls, aimed, it is said, at the church, and caught by the virgin in her mantle, which she had spread over the town to protect it during a bombardment. The high altar deserves special notice, it being one of the most beautiful in Belgium, made of marble, and sculptured, it would seem, by Italian artists. Below is the tabernacle, and underneath, St. Martin dividing his cloak. The Seven Sacraments are represented on the bas reliefs, admirable works of art, at the lower rows, and the entire construction is surmounted by a pelican. The gorgeous font, of brass, cast at Tournay, by the artist Lefevre, in 1467, is worth seeing. It is placed in the octagon baptismal of the church, and is covered with a spire, adorned by statues, and groups representing the baptism of Christ, St. Martin, &c.

Leaving Hal, we pass the village of Eysingham, and crossing the Senne, arrive at LORN, about 5 miles from Brussels. It has a very fine church, richly ornamented, and having over the high altar a painting, by De Crayer, the Martyrdom of St. Peter.

Quitting Lorn, the railway runs parallel with the canal Charleroi, passes Ruybroeck and Forest stations. After which, it leaves the suburb of St. Gillis, crossing the gate of Hal on the left, the boulevard, and arrives at the south station, entering BRUSSELS—(Route 7, page 31).

ROUTE 3.

London to Brussels—(via Dover, Ostend, Bruges, Ghent, and Malines).

London to Dover—(Route 1, page 1).

A mail and daily (except Sundays) communication now exists between Dover and Ostend. The distance from port to port is 63 English miles, and the voyage is made from $4\frac{1}{2}$ to 5 hours. Fifteen miles south the light of Dunkirk is seen, before the Ostend one shows itself. Two jetties flank the Ostend harbour, which is dry at low water, and form very nice promenades.

The Passport and Custom House Offices are quite close to the harbour, and open daily, at 5 a.m., in summer, so that tourists wishing to proceed on their route need not be delayed. A commissioner will be always found at hand to attend to one's passport and secure places, for whose services a couple of francs will be demanded.

Travellers going direct from Ostend to Cologne can avoid the necessity of having their baggage searched here, by declaring it for transit, and delivering it over to the care of a railway official, who is to be found at the Custom House. On arrival at Cologne it will be delivered up on the production of the ticket.

Ostend.—Hotels:

Mertian's New Hotel is a capital, first-rate house, very comfortable

Hotel d'Allemagne, German Hotel, facing the railway station and close to the harbour.

Hotel Fontaine, a first-class house.

Ship Brokers, Messrs. R. St. Amour and Son.

Omnibuses attend the arrival of each train.

The Harbour of Ostend is formed by a natural inlet of the sea, which has forced a passage between two sand-hills. The south western bank, or beach, is of a triangular shape, and possesses some degree of elevation above high-water mark, and the surrounding flat country, so that, at half tide, it is completely peninsulated; and on this bank the town is built. This inlet has been improved at different times. Ostend is a strongly fortified town, containing 13,000 inhabitants, and is placed between the sea and the harbour, being surrounded by water on every side, and enclosed with ramparts. The land all round is low, and the waters have to be controlled by sluices. It sustained a memorable siege of $3\frac{1}{2}$ years duration, between 1601 and 1604. 50,000 of the besieged, and 70,000 of the Spaniards who besieged it, under General Spinola, fell during the siege which was given up only by order of the "States General." The town was reduced to one heap of ruins. It was ceded in 1715 to the Emperor of Germany. Louis XV. entered it in 1745, after a siege of 18 days, which all but completed its destruction. In 1826, the gunpowder explosion which occurred there committed great ravage, and inflicted much ruin on the place. Ostend possesses a College of Navigation. The oyster parks are outside the Bruges Gate, and ought to be visited. The town, but shabby in appearance, contains, however, two good squares, or, as they are more properly called places. The Maison de Ville forms the entire side of one of them. It was formerly reckoned among the most magnificent structures of the kind in Belgium, being ornamented with two fine towers at each wing and a dome in the centre; but this superb building was nearly ruined by the bombardment of 1745. The body of the town-house still subsists, but of its dome and two beautiful towers there only remains the stump of one of them, surmounted by a wooden cupola. The church has no claim to architectural merit, but the inside is richly ornamented. It has a lofty octangular steeple, with a very clumsy spire, affording however, an excellent sea-mark.

The Fortifications of Ostend are more than two miles in circumference. They were dismantled, but had not been essentially injured. They are now undergoing repairs and additions which will make them very formidable. As the place is situated on an elevated beach, the ramparts tower above the flat country, which being lower than high-water mark, can be speedily and extensively inundated. The only hostile approaches are along the high sand-hills to the north and south; the former is protected by a strong redoubt, built by the late French government and called Fort Napoleon. It forms a favourite promenade.

Ostend is a favourite watering place, and is much frequented in the months of August and September. There are very many bathing machines on the beach; and near the sea, on the Digue, a bathing house has been established. There are steamers for London twice a-week every Tuesday and Friday night, performing the voyage in about 11 hours; also every evening except Saturday, by the British and Belgian government mail packets, to Dover in $4\frac{1}{2}$ to 5 hours.

Ostend to Bruges.—(Distance, 14 English miles). The railway, on leaving Ostend chant

sove-
10,000 meet merce persed opu-capital s have in vain such a nce in pidity, rans,
ghers,
aders,
that tal to l and erty,
o and ghent
uries.
s has tism, intelpopus is not ely, it
izens,
their now rned
of the
-that
and rt of
of the f all rn of stifful interd is, anals

,500,
and men
the re's

miles, a Fifteen before bank t
water,

The
quite o
a.m., in ceed or missior to one service

Trav can av searche deliver who is arrival
produc

Ost

Mertia
ve:

Hotel
ra

Hotel
Ship F

Omn

The inlet o betwee or bes some o and th tide, b bank t proved fortific is plac surrou with r
the w sustai betwe
and 7 under which Gene

extends through a country presenting no very remarkable appearance, being rich in an agricultural point of view, but flat and undiversified in its general appearance. The first station met with is JAMBEK, a commune with a population of 1,000, situated a little to the right of the railway. It possesses no object of interest save its ancient chateau Plaschendale.

The Dunkirk and Ostend Canals join here.

Bruges.—Hotels :

Hotel Fleur de Blé is one of the oldest establishments in the town, has been greatly improved, and is conducted on principles combining comfort with the strictest economy.

Hotel de Flandre, an old-established house, famous for its fine wines and good dinners.

Hotel de Commerce, a first-rate old established house, enjoying an excellent reputation.

The railway station at Bruges is on the Vr; dags Markt. The West Flanders Railway is now open to Courtray, making a direct railway from Ostend and Bruges to Paris, via Lille, Amiens, &c. It is 25 miles shorter than by Ghent.

On leaving Ostend it is a very general custom for travellers going to Germany to take a railway ticket for the whole distance to Cologne, for the purpose of reaching the Rhine with the least possible delay. In so doing, they deprive themselves of the opportunity of visiting the cities in Belgium, which possess more objects of interest to the lover of the fine arts, more pure and perfect specimens of florid Gothic architecture, a richer collection of rare and beautiful paintings, by the old Flemish masters, than can probably be found in the whole of Germany. If, instead of hurrying in this hot-haste through a country which presents so many points of interest to travellers in general, and to Englishmen in particular, our countrymen were to devote a part of their time to Belgium, they would never regret becoming acquainted with its peculiarities, its fine old cities, its glorious monuments, its arts and sciences, the people and their institutions.

Bruges occupies a prominent place in the history of Flanders, the traveller will find this town especially worthy of notice—not that it presents the aspect of a populous modern city, but because it has preserved the peculiarities which distinguished its appearance during the middle ages, when it was the emporium of European commerce, the residence of merchant princes, occasionally that of the reigning sovereign, and when its population exceeded 200,000. The mailed warrior or the gloved artisan meet no more upon the fortifications the commerce which animated its quays and canals is dispersed over Europe, its merchants are no longer opulent as princes, the city is no longer the capital of West Flanders. Yet though these things have passed away, we cannot infer that it was in vain that Providence raised up this town to such a remarkable point of grandeur and importance in a remote age. The characteristic intrepidity, activity, and proverbial turbulence of its artisans, the inflexible will and sturdiness of its burghers, the associations of its merchants and traders, which led to that interchange of opinion, that communion and unity of sentiment so fatal to despotism and feudal oppression, created and fostered that honest love of individual liberty, that regard and attachment for corporative and communal privileges, for which the men of Ghent and Bruges struggled during several centuries. This deep attachment to local institutions has been merged into that of national patriotism, and if the traveller, in conversing with an intelligent inhabitant of Bruges, deplore its depopulated streets, he will be told that if Bruges is not the great and important city it was formerly, it has still much to be thankful for; its citizens, instead of being at continual variance with their sovereign or the neighbouring towns, are now members of an independent kingdom, governed by a Prince of their own choice, with one of the most liberal constitutions in the world—that Bruges is no longer isolated in its splendour and solitude, but that it forms a component part of the nation, and confident in the resources of the country for the gradual development of all branches of industry, it anticipates a return of comparative prosperity.

BRUGES is situate in a spacious and beautiful plain, about six miles from the sea. It is intersected by a great number of canals, and is, indeed, the central point at which all the canals of the province meet.

The population of Bruges now exceeds 49,500, and on fête days the fine old city wears a gay and animated appearance. The beauty of the women of Bruges is of ancient repute, but the present generation scarcely justify the proverb

"Formosa Brugs puella." When they are seen enveloped in the mantilla of Spanish origin, their brunette complexions and dark eyes render them most picturesque and pleasing objects among the many splendid and exquisite specimens of architecture with which their dwellings are adorned and embellished.

"Fair city, worthy of her ancient fame!
The season of her splendour is gone by;
Yet everywhere its monuments remain,
Temples which rear their stately heads on high,
Canals that intersect the fertile plain,
Wide squares and streets, with many a court and hall.

"Spacious and undefeod, but ancient all.
When I'my read of tilts, in days of old,
Of tourneys, graced by chieftains of renown,
Fair dames, grave citizens, and warriors bold.
If fancy could pourtray some stately town,
Which of such pomp fit theatre might be,
Fair Bruges, I shall then remember thee."

SONNET.

Bruges contains very many objects of interest which will require a day at least to visit.

The Cathedral (St. Saviour). This beautiful church was founded in the seventh century by St. Eloy, and was greatly indebted for its erection to the liberality of Dagobert, the then King of France. It was entirely consumed by fire in 1368, but was again erected, after a more magnificent scale, on the same spot, the charitable subscriptions of the faithful defraying the cost. It is built of brick, and in its external appearance presents nothing remarkable or attractive, but its interior is admirable. The paintings are worth notice because of their antiquity, and representing contributions to the history of Flemish art. Immediately under the grand entrance are several works by J. Van Oost, the Baptism of Christ, Christ on the Cross, and Jesus leaving his Mother to ascend Calvary, being the principal. A small picture, with shutters, hangs at the south side of the aisle, representing the Martyrdom of St. Sylvester, by Hans Hemling. There is likewise an excellent painting of the Last Supper, with Abraham and Elijah in the centre, and at the side, by Peter Forbuis. On either side of the altar is a black and white marble tomb. The choir is adorned with tapestry executed by Vanderboicht, along which are suspended the arms of chevaliers of the order of the Torsion d'or, presents from a chapter of that order, placed in the church by Philip the Good, to whose memory a tomb is erected in one of the chapels. In the north aisle of the chapel of the Cordonne are several monumental brasses, built into the wall, which may be looked upon as interesting specimens of early Flemish art, in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries.

Notre Dame is a church no ways remarkable for its architecture, surmounted by a tower and stunted spire, 435 feet high. The most precious ornament of Notre Dame is a statue of the Virgin and Child, said to be by Michael Angelo. If it be surprising to find a work by this great man in Belgium, behold the explanation. The work was painted for Genes, and the vessel in which it was being conveyed was taken by a Dutch pirate, who brought it to Amsterdam, where a Bruges merchant bought it and presented it to this church. Horace Walpole offered, in vain, for it 30,000 florins. There are many other excellent paintings in the church, the principal of which are the Adoration of the Magi, by Seghers; the Adoration of the Shepherds, by De Crayer; an Infant Jesus, by Jacques Van Oost; St. Anthony of Padua, an Assumption, and the Marriage of St. Catherine of Sicinne.

The Tombs of Charles the Bold, Duke of Burgundy, and of his daughter, Mary, wife of the Emperor Maximilian, are to be seen in the south aisle of the choir. These were the last native sovereigns of the Netherlands. Mary of Burgundy died on the 27th of March, 1452; and Charles was killed at the battle of Nancy, in 1477. The monument of the Duchess was erected in 1495. In 1538 Philip II. paid Master Jonghehlinck the sum of 14,000 florins for the execution of one similar to that of the Duchess, for his grandfather, Charles the Bold. The effigies of both are made of copper, richly gilt, and repose at full length on slabs of black marble. Beneath and around the slabs are coats of arms richly enamelled. They have lately been re-gilt and cleaned. They are shown to the public only on days of great solemnity, but strangers can easily obtain access to see them on other occasions.

Visitors will be well repaid by visits to the churches of St. Gilles, Jacques, Walburge, Anne, &c. The Church of Jerusalem is the fruit of a vow made by a pious merchant of Bruges, who, when in the Holy City, promised to build in his native town, if ever he returned to it in safety, a temple, on the model of that of Jerusalem, with an exact representation of the tomb of our Saviour. The church also contains some fine specimens of coloured glass.

Page 30. Church of St. Saviour, Bruges.

Page 31. Church of the Holy Blood, Bruges.

In the Church of St. Salvador are the Seven Acts of Mercy, by Van Dyke; the Resurrection, by Van Os; the Martyrdom of St. Barbara, by Cels; and numerous other pictures.

The Church of St. Mary is remarkable for its fine specimens of carving; the pictures are not of striking merit.

Church of St. Basil, or of the Holy Blood is situated opposite the Town Hall. A beautiful Gothic façade will attract notice. It is called, Le petite église de Saint Basil, and tradition says that some drops of our Saviour's blood, brought by Count Thierry of Alsace, from the Holy Land, are now deposited in a richly jewelled and enamelled shrine of gilt silver. This is shewn in the Upper Chapel, the shrine being exposed on every Wednesday to the veneration of the faithful. In this chapel are some beautiful paintings, and a pulpit, with medallions carved in wood. Fifty cents are charged for admission.

Hospital of St. John, which is close to the church of Notre Dame. The period of its foundation is unknown. It is only known that in 1188 the governor prescribed many rules to the religious brothers and sisters of the house. It originally only received Magdalenes into it, but now persons of every description are received and attended by the sisters. This institution is celebrated for possessing several beautiful pictures, painted by Hans Hemling, so remarkable for purity of colouring and brightness of tone, that the most indifferent spectator will find himself an admirer of their prominent beauties. In the chapter house are hung the portraits of some of the directors and superiors of the establishment, the celebrated paintings,—the pride of the city and admiration of travellers,—by Hans Hemling, presented by him to the hospital, as a mark of his gratitude for the kindness with which he was treated when a patient there. The other objects are the Virgin and Child, the Marriage of St. Catherine, the Decapitation of St. John the Baptist, and St. John the Evangelist at Patmos, with a Crucifixion by Franks, and a Holy Family, by Vandike. The Belegary, or Chasse de St. Ursula, is worth notice, consisting of a wooden coffer, painted by Hemling, in which is the arm of the saint. The sides are painted with representations of St. Ursula's pilgrimages and martyrdom. The history of these paintings is singular and merits a short notice. Hemling was originally a libertine and dissipated character at Bruges. He was engulfed in misery and became a soldier. He was not known as a vaunter when a wound, received in 1477 at the battle of Nancy, compelled him to enter the hospital as a patient. His wound was healed in a short time, but he so well liked the mode of life, &c., of the hospital, that he remained in it for six years, and paid his expenses by painting these pictures.

The Hôtel de Ville is a beautiful gothic monument, well preserved, founded in 1377 by Count Louis de Maele. It was formerly surmounted by six beautiful towers. The niches seen in front contained 33 statues of the Counts of Flanders, the designs of which are preserved in the beautiful work of M. Delpuix—The Annals of Bruges. To-day these niches are empty. In 1792, the troops of the French revolution caused the statues to be destroyed as "images of tyrants." They were burnt in the Grand Square in a bonfire, the materials of which were composed of the gallows, the scaffold, and the wheel. In the Grand Hall of the building is the public library containing 8,000 vols. and 500 MSS. The staircase of the Hotel deserves notice, and also the paintings adorning it.

Palais de Justice is close to the Hôtel de Ville, and was formerly the residence of the Counts of Flanders, and was anciently called Palais du Franc de Bruges—the Palace of the Liberty of Bruges—a large district independent of the city. The interior contains little remarkable save the council chamber of the magistrates and the magnificent chimney or mantel-piece. It is carved in wood, and is a chef-d'œuvre of sculpture in its way, including statues of Charles V., Mary of Burgundy, Maximilian, Charles the Bold, and Marguerite of York. The Story of Susannah is represented on the marble bas-reliefs decorating it.

Tour des Halles, or Market Tower.—In the Grand Square, or market-place, is held the annual fair, commencing the 4th May, and lasting 15 days. There are also two horse fairs, of two days each, held the first Thursday after Easter, and the 20th July. The meat market in this square is exquisitely neat and well arranged. &c.

the extremity of the square is a steeple or belfry, which is esteemed one of the most beautiful in Europe; the ascent to it is by 533 steps, and it contains a splendid set of obelisks, which are set in motion every quarter of an hour by an immense cylinder, acting like the barrel of an organ and setting in motion the keys of the instrument.

Near this belfry is the splendid building formerly occupied as the drapers' hall; it is now divided into two coffee-houses, and contains a fine vaulted saloon, in which the National Society of Literature hold their meetings. Opposite to this building, and forming the corners of the street of St. Arnaud, are two old houses, one of which was the residence of the Emperor Charles, and of Charles II. of England, during his exile. In his exile he did not want a royal title, for the burghers of Bruges elected him Roi des Arbalétriers, King of the Cross-bowmen. The house now bears the sign "Au Lion Belge."

The Covered Fish Market, with its granite columns, is a handsome building, lately erected. In the opposite corner of the Rue St. Arnaud is the site of the Craenenberg, traditionally interesting as being the prison of Maximilian in 1487-8.

Near the Rue Noordland is the Prinsenhof. In it Marguerite of York, sister to Edward IV., was married, in 1468, to Charles the Bold.

The Academy of Painting is in the building known as Het Poorters Huis, formerly the factory of the Biscayens, and contains some very fine old paintings, by J. Van Eyck, Hans Memling, Trobas, and Claessens.

The principal manufactures of Bruges are lace, woollen stuffs, camlets, hats, snuff, china, carpets, ticking, dimities, and a blue dye which is peculiar to the loom.

The lace-workers are said to exceed 5,000 in number. There are also numerous salt and sugar refineries, rope walks, dyeing-houses, breweries, distilleries, and bleaching grounds.

Bruges also contains a museum, with a tolerable collection of pictures; a public library, and a botanic garden, a theatre, an academy of fine arts, and several literary and scientific societies.

The English church service is performed on Sundays.

The tract of country surrounding Bruges, for 26 miles, was formerly called the Free Country of Bruges, from the circumstance of the inhabitants having succeeded in throwing off the yoke of both the rival cities of Bruges and Ghent, and obtaining from the Counts of Flanders numerous exclusive privileges, amongst which were those of separate magistrates and tribunals. The high state of cultivation into which this province has been brought by the unremitting exertions of the inhabitants, cannot be too much admired. The northern parts abound in the richest pastures, and produce wheat, rye, and barley in profusion, while the southern districts are equally fertile in flax and rape-seed.

Bruges to Ghent.—Quitting the station at Bruges, the railway is carried a little to the south side of the canal, and passing to the right the village of Oostcamp, it runs through a country no ways interesting, and arrives at Blomsendaal, a little village containing 3,150 inhabitants, and watered by the Splinterbeck, which flows into the canal.

Shortly after leaving this station, the road winds to the left a little distance from the canal from Ghent to Bruges, and entering the district of the commune of St. George, it quits West and enters East Flanders. Shortly after arriving at Aelstre, a commune of the district of Ghent, with a population of 5,400 inhabitants, it is seen to the right of the canal. The road from here passes for some minutes through a cutting, and emerging thence commands a view of Bellem and Hansbeke—the former a village of 1,700 inhabitants the latter one with 2,800. The railway is next carried over, by a bridge, the Canal de Neville, which joins the canal from Ghent to Bruges, and arrives at Landeghem, a commune of the district of Ghent, with a population of 2,000 souls. Leaving here we cross the Lys by a bridge, and arrive at Ghent. The bridge spanning the Lys was the scene of a serious accident on 20th August, 1837, in which two railway officials were killed and one grievously wounded.

Ghent station is on the south-east side of the town. On the high ground to the left, at the other side of the Scheldt, is the new citadel. The Church of St. Pierre, with its dome, is seen on the other side of the hill.

The Grand Canal between Bruges and Ghent is bounded by high banks, and lined with tall trees, entwined by pretty villas and sweet gardens.

GHENT TO BRUSSELS.—(See Route 16, page 55).

Page 19.

Railway Station, Bruges.

Page 21.

Hôtel de Ville, Bruges.

Tour des Halles, Bruges.

Page 21.

Palace of the Counts of Flanders.

Page 22.

The Academy, Bruges.

Page 21.

Mantle-piece in the Salle du Franc, Bruges.

ROUTE 4.

London to Antwerp (by the Scheldt).—Distance 210 miles. The direct route from London to Antwerp, via the Thames and the Scheldt, is most pleasant and convenient.

The steamers start from St. Katharine's Wharf, London, every Thursday and Sunday morning. They are splendid vessels, with excellent accommodation.

Families in particular, who are going to the Rhine, and wish to include a visit to Antwerp in their tour, will find this route par excellence, the most advantageous. The fares are reasonably low; and the advantage of conveying that indispensable encumbrance—the luggage—from London to Antwerp without a "transfer," will be appreciated by every head of a "family."

The sail down the Thames is fraught with characteristics full of interest. A perfect forest of masts, belonging to ships of all sizes and nations, looms out in the Pool. Colliers, coasters, steamboats, and river craft, throng the Thames in every direction, and the fleet of merchantmen, and the restless activity seen along the banks, give a vast conception of the glories of that commerce which has enriched the city of London. As the vessel proceeds cautiously on, we are interested by the granaries and wharfs on each side, recognised as the largest in the world.

The Tower is on the northern bank of the Thames. It is a large pile of building, including an area of more than twelve acres, and owes its irregularity to having been erected and enlarged by various sovereigns at distant periods of time. Besides being the repository of the regalia, it is now used as a garrison and arsenal. St. Katharine's Docks, adjacent to the Tower, occupy twenty-four acres, and were opened 1828.

The London Docks come next, covering an area of thirty-four acres. In the vaults more than 65,500 pipes of wine can be stowed.

The Thames Tunnel affords a curious and convenient communication between Wapping and Rotherhithe. It is thirteen hundred feet long, and passes underneath the river at the depth of sixty-three feet. It was opened in 1843, and cost £600,000.

The West India Docks extending across the northern extremity of the Isle of Dogs from Limehouse to Blackwall, were opened in 1832, and formed the first establishment of the kind in London.

The Commercial Docks are seen on the other side of the river.

DEPTFORD, with its Docks and shipyards next claims our notice. A short distance further and the "Dreadnought" is seen before us. It is now used as a marine hospital.

GREENWICH, with its fine observatory and hospital, standing out boldly and picturesquely from the clustering foliage of the park, greets our view. For its description and history, see Bradshaw's Guide through London and its environs. The Isle of Dogs is on the opposite side of the river, and an abrupt turn in the river brings us to BLACKWALL, with its pier and the handsome terminus of the Blackwall Railway. Just below the railway station on the left are the new Victoria Docks, recently opened.

WOOLWICH, on the right, with its rotunda, cannon-foundry, arsenal, and barracks, is now seen, and ERITH, on the right, with its pretty rural church, immediately after.

GRAVESEND, on the right, with the slope of the windmill-hill rising proudly behind the town, will next attract our notice. Tilbury Fort, with its gate or blockhouse of the time of Henry VIII., lies across the river, and the widening expanse of water, enlivened by the constant transit of vessels, presents to us a moving panorama of animated interest.

From hence to the Nore there is nothing on either side of the river, deserving of a detailed notice.

We sail almost in a straight line from the Thames to the Scheldt. The latter stream is situated immediately opposite the mouth of the English river and the port of London. It caught the eye of Napoleon as suitable for a two-fold purpose, either to annoy the English in war, or rival them in commerce. Entering the West Scheldt at the mouth of the river, we see, on the left, Walcheren, the most extensive of the nine islands forming the province of Zealand. The district lies many feet below the level of the sea. Various branches of the river Scheldt separate the islands one from the other, which are protected from the inroads of the ocean by sand banks and dykes, or sea walls, measuring more than 300 miles in extent, and kept in repair at an annual cost of 2,000,000 florins. These dykes are divided by engineers into two classes, called polders calamiteux, and polders non-calamiteux—the former maintained at the expense of government, and the others by private individuals. The country is as it were, partitioned out by dykes, the interior defences serving as a barrier against the further ravages of the flood, should the outer dykes break. The great dyke of West Kappel ruptured in 1808, and the waters burst in, inundating the greater part of the island. In the streets of Middleburg the sea was up to the roofs of the houses, and the strength of its walls only saved the town from being destroyed. Corn and madder are the staple produce of the province, which is very fertile. As we ascend the Scheldt, we see, now and then, peering over the artificial mounds enclosing them, the tops of the spires, roofs, and tall chimneys of the towns and villages in which the province is very populous. The inhabitants of Zeeland are extremely industrious.

Cadaand we see to the right, facing Walcheren—FLUSHING—(Inns: Engel, and Gouden Appel) is the first town we see on our left. It is situated on the right bank of the river, contains a dockyard, naval arsenal, and has a population of 7,000. The largest merchant vessels are enabled to get up to the town, and unload at the quays, by means of two deep and wide canals communicating with the sea. A great part of the town was destroyed in 1809, when it was bombarded and taken by the English, under Lord Chatham, on which occasion, three hundred of the inhabitants perished. This cruel act was the only result of the naval expedition of 1809, which consisted of thirty-seven ships of the line, twenty-three frigates, and eighty-two gun-shot boats, with a force of one hundred thousand men. The defences of Flushing have since been much strengthened. The fort of Rammekens, on the east, and those of Breakens on the opposite side of the river, near three miles wide, together with the works of Flushing, completely command the entrance to the mouth of the river.

This place is remarkable as the birth-place of Admiral de Ruiter, to whom a statue has been erected. The town hall and two churches, together with one hundred houses, were destroyed by the bombs and congreve rockets of the English. We can see at West-Kappel, to the best perfection, the construction of the dykes. There is a gap in the Dunes at this point, which is defended by a dyke four thousand seven hundred yards long, and thirty-one feet high: upon the stability of this, the safety of the island mainly depends. Diligences run from Flushing every hour to MIDDLEBURG, the capital of Zeeland, containing about 14,000 inhabitants. It is a very clean town and has a magnificent town hall, with twenty-five statues of the Counts of Flanders and their Countesses. This town is famed as the spot where the telescope was invented, in 1601, by Hans Lipperhey, a spectacle maker. Walcheren has a most unhealthy climate. On the right bank of the river we see Zuid Beveland.

BIERVLIET, a small town, a short distance off, on the left bank, is only famous as the birth-place of William Beukels, who invented, in 1886, the art of curing herrings. In the church here, a monument was erected to him, and Charles V. and his sister, the Queen of Hungary, visited it through respect to his memory, who founded for Holland, the great staple trade of her wealth. An inundation, in 1377, which drowned nineteen small towns and their inhabitants, detached Biervliet from the continent, but every acre lost has since been recovered by Dutch energy and industry.

TERNEUSEN is seen to the left. The sluice gates closing the entrance to the new canal, extending to Ghent, are close by it. This canal is 15 feet deep, and gives and serves as a drain to carry off the waters of the district through which it passes. There are sluices at Sas Van Gend, which can lay the entire country under water. Piers and breakwaters of piles or masonry protect the artificial embankments of the Scheldt from the currents and floating masses of ice. Both banks of the Scheldt, below this place, belong to Holland, but the river flows through the Belgian territory. After we pass the terminatory point of the island of Zuid Beveland, which is separated from the mainland by a strait, a passage called Kreek Bak Antwerp, with its tall and lofty spires, is seen as we approach Forts Lillo (r) and Liefkenshoek (l). These two forts completely command a view of the passage of the river. Up to 1839 they appertained to the Dutch, in whose hands they remained after the Belgic Revolution. In that year they were dismantled and given up to the Belgians, in exchange for Venloo, and in compliance with the treaty of the Quadruple Alliance.

The Polders are seen on the left bank above

The commercial capital of Belgium is situated on the bank of the Scheldt.

cost of 2,000,000 florins. These dykes are divided in the Dunes at this point, which is defended by

The Polders are seen on the left bank above Fort Liefkenshoek. These remained under water during the contest with the Dutch. Before arriving at Antwerp, we pass several other forts. The Duke of Parma, in 1605, threw across the Scheldt his celebrated bridge, 2,400 feet long, between the Callo to the left, and Oordam on the right, by means of which he closed the navigation of the river, and so cut off all supplies from the besieged city of Antwerp, which caused it chiefly to surrender. It was guarded at either point by two forts, and on it were mounted 97 pieces of cannon. Beside, it was a protecting fleet, which was to assist in repelling any attack.

A foreign engineer residing at Antwerp invented fire-ships, which were sent against the bridge and blew up one of the stockades, killing 300 Spanish soldiers. Another attempt was made by the besieged to destroy the bridge, but it failed, and Antwerp had to surrender.

Opposite the Fort of St. Laurent, immediately below Antwerp, a young Dutch officer, Van Speyk, blew himself and his ship up, when boarded by the Belgians. A monument for this suicidal act, has been erected to his memory.

Antwerp.—(In French, Anvers).—Hotels:

The Hotel St. Antoine, one of the best in Europe; much frequented by the English for the excellent accommodation it affords, and its table d'hôte, which is deservedly celebrated. The Hotel du Parc. This hotel cannot be too highly recommended for its comfort, cleanliness, civility, and charges.

Hotel du Grand Laboureur, Place de Meir.

The Hotel Rubens has been enlarged, and considerably improved.

Barber's Ship Hotel, on the Quay, a highly respectable commercial house.

Ship Broker, Mr. B. Kennedy, agent of the General Steam Navigation Company.

It is 60 miles from the sea, 27½ from Brussels, 82 from Ghent, 150½ from Cologne, and 258½ from Paris. The Post Office is in the Place Verte. A British Consul is resident. On the Quay Van Dyck, on the opposite bank of the river, is the station of the Direct railway to Ghent. Omnibuses call at the hotels. The stand for Vigilantes is by the Post Office and Place de Meir.

" Astonished, I beheld the adjoining port,
Belgium's emporium, and the famed route
Of riches maritime: a wondrous sight."

The commercial capital of Belgium is situated on the banks of the Scheldt. It is celebrated for its magnificent docks, constructed under the direction of Napoleon, which are capable of receiving two thousand ships. At a former period of its history, Antwerp contained a population of 200,000 souls, and at this instant it still appears a bustling thriving city, with only 80,000 persons, who find employment in the occupations afforded by its maritime commerce, and its manufactories of black silk, its sugar refineries, its manufacture, bleaching, and embroidery of lace.

Objects of attraction to be seen in Antwerp:—

1. The Cathedral and Quentin Matsy's Well; 2. Church of St. Jacques; 3. Rubens' House; 4. Church of St. Paul—Paintings and Cavalry; 5. Church of the Augustines—Pictures by Rubens, Vandyke, and Jordans; 6. The Museum—Collection of Paintings; 7. Statue of Rubens, Place Verte; 8. The Citadel; 9. Zoological Gardens, near the railway station.

Tradition ascribes its origin to a giant, who inhabited a fortress on the banks of the Scheldt, and exacted a heavy tribute from all who wished to cross the stream, under pain of losing their right hand. This continued until Brabon (who gave his name to Brabant) succeeded in destroying the monster, whose right hand he cut off, and threw it into the river, thence the residence of the giant obtained the name of Handwerpen, from hand, werpen, to throw. The memory of this fabulous legend is preserved in the city arms, which contain two amputated hands, a triangular castle. It is, however, historically certain that this town was in existence as early as the fourth century. In 630 a church dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul was built by St. Amand, who first preached the Gospel here. The town was afterwards ravaged by the Normans, and from 886 to 980 was in the possession of the Moors, who were annihilated in the latter year by the inhabitants of Flanders. In the 12th century the commercial privileges granted to Antwerp by the Dukes of Brabant, had attracted so many strangers, that the town was insufficient to contain themselves and in 1304 John II. enlarged it considerably. Its harbour was open to ships of all nations, and Antwerp became in the 16th century, the first commercial city in the world. The Scheldt was navigable for the largest vessels, being 20 feet deep at low water, and 4½ feet at high water. At this peried the population of the city exceeded 200,000, among whom were 300 painters and 124 goldsmiths; 500 vessels entered the harbour daily, and 2,500 was the average number of those at anchor before the city. The taxes received in the city annually amounted to 2,000,000 florins ($160,000), the sums circulated every year by the commerce of the town exceeded 500,000,000 ($40,000,000). During the reign of the emperor Charles V., a merchant of Antwerp, named Deena, having received the honour of his sovereign's company at dinner, closed the repast by throwing into the flames the Emperor's acknowledgment for 2,000,000 florins, which he had lent him, saying that the loan was more than repaid by the honour of the visit. It was on this occasion that the Emperor made the remarkable reply, which, coming from such a mouth, is a never-to-be-forgotten tribute to the dignity of commerce, "My friends! the nobles pillage me, the men of letters instruct me, but the merchants enrich me." From the time of the independence of the United Provinces, the importance of Antwerp gradually declined; the Dutch, with their usual policy, having made themselves masters of the Scheldt, blocked up the entrance of the harbour, and by that means transferred to Amsterdam the greater part of the commerce of Antwerp. In 1576, the Spanish garrison having been left for a long time without pay, rose in a revolt, burnt the town-house, pillaged the city, putting to the sword more than 10,000 inhabitants. In 1582, the Duke de Alençon, having been unsuccessful in his attempt to gain the hand of Elizabeth of England, arrived in Antwerp, where he was inaugurated Duke of Brabant, in pursuance of the treaty made in 1580, at Plasais-les-Tours. In 1583, the Duke contrived to introduce a numerous body of French troops into the territory, with whose assistance he endeavoured to establish himself as the absolute king of the Low Countries, but, being defeated in his attempt by the resolute resistance of every class of the inhabitants, he retired to Chateau-Thierry, where he died of grief, in June, 1594. It was at Antwerp that the celebrated truce, for twelve years, between Belgium and the United Provinces was signed, on the 9th of April, 1609. In 1700, the Duke of Marlborough took the town, and in 1746 it was successfully besieged by the French, but restored to Austria in 1748, by the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle. After the French revolution it was frequently taken and re-taken by the French and Austrians, but remained quietly in the possession of the former from 1794 until 1814, when it became part of the new kingdom of the Netherlands. By treaty made between France and Holland, in 1795, the mouth of the Scheldt was re-opened, since that period, the commerce of Antwerp has been reviving, and, as the navigation of the Scheldt is now declared open, it is fast regaining, at the expense of Amsterdam, the commercial advantages of which it had been deprived. There is no town in Belgium which possesses so much attraction as Antwerp. It literally abounds in the riches of art, and several days, at least, should be devoted to an attentive examination of its treasures. The churches claim our first notice.

The Cathedral of Notre Dame is the most splendid Gothic building in Europe. It was commenced about the middle of the thirteenth century and occupied 84 years in building. It is 500 feet long by 230 wide, and 360 high, and contains 230 vaulted arcades, supported by 125 columns. The tower is 466 feet high, and the ascent to it is by 622 steps; it was commenced in 1422 from designs by the architect Amelius, and finished in 1513. The exquisite lightness and purity of proportion exhibited in this tower are unequalled; the view from the summit extends over an immense expanse of flat country. It was intended to have a second tower of the same height, which was commenced, but was never built higher than the first gallery. In 1540 a chime of 60 bells was added to the tower. On entering the cathedral by the principal nave, the eye is struck with the magnificent cupola; in the ceiling is seen the Virgin surrounded by Angels with unfolded wings. Approaching the choir we perceive the grand altar, executed in marble from the designs of Rubens, and ornamented with his immortal work representing the Assumption. In this cathedral are also the Elevation of the Cross, consisting of a centre with two wings, and the Descent from the Cross, to which have been appended, as wings, the Visitation and Purification of Mary. These pictures are in Rubens' best style, the anatomical precision with which every muscle is delineated by the Elevation is beyond praise; in the Descent the right arm of our Saviour deserves particular notice. It would be impossible to particularise in detail all the objects of interest in this splendid

Page 26. Notre Dame, Antwerp.

Page 26. Interior of Notre Dame, Antwerp

Page 27. Pulpit in St.. Andrew's, Antwerp

Page 27. St. James's Church, Antwerp.

building, but we must mention the chapel of the Sacrament, the altar of which, executed by Verbuiggen, represents the Holy Ark, and is ornamented by a splendid picture of the Disciples at Emmaus, by Herreyres; the portraits of Luther, Calvin, Erasmus, and the other now celebrated reformers, contained in a picture representing our Saviour disputing with the Doctors, by Franck, the elder. The tomb of Ambrose Capello, seventh bishop, deserves particular praise, the pulpit, also by Verbruggen, the white marble figure sculptured by Scheemake, on the tomb of Van Delft; the mausoleum of the printer, Moretus, enriched by the pencil of Rubens, and an exquisite picture of the Marriage of Cana, by Martin de Vas. This cathedral formerly contained 32 altars, all of white marble, but one only escaped the devastating fury of the revolutionary mob. Near the foot of the tower, outside the cathedral, is the tomb of Quentin Matsys, with this inscription: "Connubialis amor de muliebra fecit appellem." This epitaph commemorates the fact of Matsys having abandoned his original trade of a blacksmith, in order to study painting and render himself worthy of the hand of his beloved, the daughter of Flors, a painter, who had resolved to have none but an artist for a son-in-law. After indefatigable study for many months, Matsys began to hope that he should succeed in his new undertaking, but had not determined in what manner to make his first attempt to win the professional approbation of Flors, when being one day in the artist's study, his attention was struck by a singular painting called the Fallen Angels, which Flors had just finished, after immense labour, and which he considered as his masterpiece. Actuated by a sudden and irresistible impulse, Matsys seized a pencil and painted an enormous bee crawling on the thigh of one of the Angels. Such an exploit would have ruined the young aspirant with most artists, but Flors had seen enough to appreciate the talent displayed in the execution, and not only forgave the singular manner of its development, but rewarded the artist with his daughter's hand. The picture is still preserved in the Museum. Near this tomb is the famous well, the iron work of which was entirely made by Matsys with the hammer, and without the use of file, proving that he was as eminent in his original trade as in his adopted profession. On Sundays and high festivals the masses of the great German composers are admirably performed in the cathedral.

The church next in importance is that of St. James; it is of great extent, and adorned with a number of Ionic columns in marble, supporting the great entrance; the marble gallery and the grand altar, inlaid with white and black marble, and supported by twisted columns, are perfect specimens of art. In this church is the tomb of Rubens; near it is a picture by himself, representing the infant Jesus sitting on his mother's knees, surrounded by a number of figures, all of which are portraits of the painter, his wives, and family; one of the females represents the original of the celebrated Chapeau de Paille. The pulpit, chastely and elegantly sculptured by Willemssens, merits attention, as do all the windows. The various chapels, 28 in number, are built with marble of different colours; in that dedicated to the Holy Sacrament, is a splendid picture of the Last Supper, by Otto Vennius, and three admirable pieces of sculpture, St. Peter, by Werbruggen, St. Paul, by Willemssens, and the First Person of the Trinity, by Quellyn; and in that of St. Roch is a magnificent picture of the saint, by Seghers. The Last Judgment, by Van Heemsen, is a singular picture, deserving attention from the peculiarly vivid tint which the robes have retained, though more than 300 years have elapsed since it was painted. There are numerous other works of great merit, but it is sufficient to draw the attention of the tourist to the above as the principal.

The Church of St. Andrew was made a parochial church in 1529, by Margaret of Austria, the sister of Charles V. of Germany, on the occasion of her signing with Louisa of Savoy, Duchess of Angoulême, the mother of Francis I. of France, the treaty of Cambay, which, negotiated and concluded by the talents of two women, brought to a termination (though unfortunately but for a short time) the long pending wars between those powerful and rival princes. In this church are numerous marble altars of great beauty, and several fine pictures, the principal of which are the Martyrdom of St. Andrew, by Otto Vennius, and the Guardian Angel, by Quellyn. It also contains a portrait of Mary, Queen of Scots, and a marble mausoleum executed to her memory at the expense of two English ladies.

The parochial Church of St. Paul was built in 1246 by Henry III., Duke of Brabant, and contains numerous fine paintings, among which are the Adoration of the Shepherds and the Scourging of Christ, by Rubens; the Descent from the Cross, by Cels; Christ in the Garden, and the Seven Works of Mercy, by Teniers the elder; Christ bearing the Cross, by Van Dyck; a Head of Christ, by Otto Venius; Christ Crucified, by Jordaens; and St. Dominic, copied from Correggio, by Crayer. A globe, with Time holding an Arrow, which points to the hours in succession, forms the clock, and is a curious piece of mechanism. Near the entrance of this church is the celebrated representation of Mount Calvary, beneath which is the Tomb of Christ, containing an image of the Saviour in a shroud of superb silk, surrounded by a vivid picture of Purgatory, the flames of which are reflected on every side, while the horribly grotesque expression of the tormented souls inspires, at first sight, a sentiment of involuntary awe, which stifles and subdues the perceptions of the ridiculous arising from a more detailed examination of the same.

In the Church of the Augustines is an admirable picture by Van Bree, a living artist. It represents the Baptism of St. Augustine, and is remarkable for the beauty of its colouring. The Martyrdom of St. Appolonius, by Jordaens, St. Augustine's Vision, by Van Dyck, and a series of designs representing the principal events of the life of St. Augustin, are not to be passed over without notice. The pulpit and the grand altar, the one carved the other sculptured by Werbruggen, are also much admired. The church of St. Anthony contains only two good pictures, a Dead Christ, by Van Dyck, and St. Francis receiving the infant Christ from the hands of his mother, by Rubens. The church of St. Charles Borromeo was formerly the most costly edifice of its size in Europe; it was commenced by the Jesuits in 1614, and finished in 1621. The most boundless expense was lavished on it; the finest marble was brought from Genoa for its construction, and the whole was completed from the designs of Rubens. The great altar was formed of marble, porphyry, jasper, and gold; and the shrines of the Virgin and St. Ignatius were of dazzling magnificence. But this splendid edifice was destroyed by lightning in 1748, and the present imitation of it in stone has supplied its place. The most remarkable pictures are,

Simeon in the Temple, by Delin; the Assumption, by Schut, and a Priest administering the Sacrament to a Knight, by Crayer. In the chapel of St. Ignatius is a communion-table of Carrara marble, sculptured in the finest style of art, by Van Papenhaved. The Museum is the finest in the kingdom, and contains 127 pictures by the first masters of the Flemish school; among them (in addition to the picture of the Fallen Angels we have before mentioned) are the Martyrdom of St. John, the Burial of Christ, and the Head of John the Baptist, by Quentin Matsys; a Holy Family, the Virgin interceding for the souls in Purgatory, the Communion of St. Francis, Jesus shewing his wounds to St. Thomas, the Adoration of the Magi, St. Anne teaching the Virgin to read (an exquisite picture of still life), Christ between the Two Thieves, and numerous others by Rubens (the last mentioned picture is, perhaps, the finest specimen of the artist's genius; the impenitent thief is depicted with a fidelity almost too horrible to be contemplated); a Dead Christ, Christ on the Cross, St. Catherine of Sienna, St. Dominic, and others, by Van Dyck; St. Luke before the Proconsul, the Charity of St. Nicholas to a Poor Family, and others, by Otto Venius; the Last Supper, the Adoration of the Shepherds, and others, by Jordaens; the Resurrection, by Martin de Vos; the Adoration of the Magi, by Albert Durer; Portrait of St. Ignatius surrounded by a garland of flowers, by Seghers and Schut; &c. The chair of Rubens is likewise preserved here, and in an adjoining apartment is a fine collection of casts. In the garden of the Museum are several busts, and a bronze statue of Mary of Burgundy ornamenting her tomb. She was drowned in attempting to save the life of her dog, whose image likewise forms part of the monument. This Museum may always be visited by strangers without difficulty. There are also several private collections, which are shown to travellers with great readiness; the most remarkable is that of M. Van Lancker, in the place de Mer, which is rich in most carefully selected specimens of the best masters. There is also a Museum of Natural History in the Rue du Convent, which is worthy of attention. There is a public Academy for paintings, sculpture, architecture, and engraving, which was originally founded in 1464, and was taken under immediate patronage of royalty in

Page 25.

View of Antwerp.

Marriage Hall, Antwerp.

Page 26.

The Bourse, Antwerp.

1817. An immense number of young artists study there. A society for the encouragement of the fine arts has long been established, which distributes prizes every third year, to artists of merit; the allotting of the prizes is preceded by an exhibition, to which none but the works of living and native artists are admitted.

The Citadel was originally built in 1568, by Paolotto and Cerbelloni, under the direction of the Duke of Alva; it is of immense strength, being in the form of a pentagon, with six bastions, which command each other, and are defended by deep and broad trenches. This fortress formerly contained the bagne, or place of detention for criminals condemned to hard labour. It contains fifteen wells, and a handsome church, in which protestant service is performed. When Carnot was governor of Antwerp, under Napoleon, he spared no pains to strengthen these fortifications, and succeeded, as he thought, in rendering them impregnable, but they opposed a very ineffectual resistance to the progress of the English arms in 1814, when the town was taken, after a bombardment which nearly destroyed the whole of the docks. But the event which gives the citadel of Antwerp its greatest interest in modern times, is its siege and surrender to the arms of France at the close of the year 1832. From the period of the revolution, which divided Belgium from Holland in 1830, the Dutch had retained possession of the citadel, which commands not only the navigation of the Scheldt, but holds the entire city of Antwerp at its mercy. The forts below the town, on each side of the river, were also in the hands of the Dutch, so that the late monarch had the control of the commerce of Antwerp as effectually as at any period during his reign. To put an end to the incongruous state of things, after upwards of two years spent by Great Britain and France in fruitless endeavours to effect a pacification between the parties, these two powers resolved upon employing force to compel the King of Holland to relinquish a position which gave him so decided an advantage, and which also kept both countries in a state of agitation and warlike preparation, the evils of which were not very inferior to those of war itself. A combined English and French squadron was therefore dispatched to blockade the mouth of the Scheldt; see, while an imposing French force, under Marshal Gerard, proceeded to lay siege to the citadel and the adjacent forts by land. The French army was much larger than was deemed necessary for the mere reduction of the fortress, but the Prussians had established a large corps of observation on the right of the Meuse, and the King of Holland, on his side, had levied a powerful force, which was kept ready for action within a few leagues from Antwerp; consequently, in order to be ready for every contingency, the army under Marshal Gerard was such as to ensure its success; it consisted of nearly 50,000 infantry, 8,000 cavalry, and a tremendous train of artillery. The siege of 1832 commenced on the 29th November, and terminated on the 23rd of January, 1833, in the surrender of the garrison. The French, under Marshal Gerard, amounted to 68,000 men. The late Duke of Orleans commanded the troops in the trenches. The best proof that could be given of the determination and bravery with which General Chasse had defended the trust confided to him, was found in the state of the fortress when entered by the victors, all the places which had been built and considered bomb-proof were discovered to be in a state of utter devastation; heaps of ruins, black and smoking from recent conflagration, marked where buildings had previously stood, and even the hospital which contained the sick and wounded, and amputated soldiers, and which was so placed as to be, at least comparatively secure, was found to have been so injured as to threaten momentarily to fall upon the heads of the inmates; the loss of the besieged was stated at 90 killed, 349 wounded, and 67 missing; that of the French, 108 killed and 697 wounded. The order of the day of the French Marshal stated that 14,000 metres (between eight and nine miles) of trenches had been opened during the siege, and 63,000 cannon-balls fired at the citadel. An application through a laquai du place to the Hôtel de Ville will obtain an admission to see the citadel.

The Hôtel de Ville is situated in the principal market-place, in which the markets are held every Wednesday and Friday. It was built in 1581, and enlarged in 1713, by pulling down twenty-nine houses. It has a frontage of 250 feet long, and is adorned with statues of the Virgin, Justice, and Prudence, with their attributes. The whole front is covered with ornamental sculpture. In this building is an extensive Public Library, and a collection of ancient and modern pictures.

The Bourse is principally remarkable as having been the model from which Sir Thomas Gresham formed his design for the Royal Exchange of London; it was commenced in 1531, burnt down in 1583 and finally completed in 1584. It is one hundred and eighty feet long by one hundred and forty wide, surrounded by forty-four stone columns, supporting a gallery. It has two towers, with a clock and a sun-dial. Above the Exchange is the Academy of Painting, and beneath it are subterranean warehouses for the use of the merchants. The form of the City of Antwerp resembles a strung bow, the string being represented by the Scheldt; it contains twenty-three public squares and upwards of two hundred streets. The most beautiful is the place de Meir in which is the royal palace, which was purchased by Napoleon, and furnished by him for his own residence. It contains a few fine paintings. In the place Verte, a square handsomely planted with trees, are held on the 17th of May, and on the 16th of August, fairs which last thirty days, for merchandise of all kinds; here also is the handsome building inhabited by Carnot, while governor of Antwerp. In the square, called the place Vendredi, is a house the front of which is embellished with a figure of Hercules accompanied by a woman, bearing the inscription "Labore et Constantia." This was formerly the printing house of Christopher Plantin and his successor, Moretus. The town also contains a Theatre, a Circus for the exhibition of horsemanship, an Athenæum, a Mont-de-Piété, a Foundling Hospital, four Asylums, one of which is for foreigners, and five Hospitals. Antwerp is the birth-place of Crayer, Rubens, Van Dyck, Jordaens, the two Teniers, and Ommegank, all painters of the first class; Edelinck the engraver, Ortelius the geographer; Grammage, Butkers, Sanderus, and Vammeteren, historians; Moretus the printer, and Stockmans, whose legal decisions are of the greatest authority in the Belgic courts. The house of Rubens still exists; the street in which it is situated now bears the name of the painter. The numerous associations called "harmonies," in which the best compositions of the best masters are admirably performed by amateurs, will afford great pleasure to the lover of music.

There are public baths in the Place Verte and in the Esplanade. The environs of Antwerp afford beautiful walks, particularly in the park, which is situated just outside the gate leading to Brussels.

The scenery between Antwerp and Malines is rather pretty. The land is well cultivated, and there are several picturesque-looking old châteaux on both sides of the line.

The stations are VIEUX DIEU, CONNICH, DUVELL.

MALINES, or MECHELIN (for description of which see page 14). This is the central station to which the Brussels, Antwerp, Ostend, and Cologne lines converge. Passengers from Antwerp or Ostend going to Cologne, change trains at this station.

The guards will always promptly answer this question: Change font de convois ici pour Cologne?

ROUTE 5.

Bruges to Courtray.

BRUGES.—See preceding Route. The first station arrived at is THOROUT, a small town situated in a fertile district, remarkable for the manufacture of coarse woollen cloth and excellent lace. Its only objects of attraction are the large Collegiate Church and Stadthuis. The Castle of Wynendale is close by. It was in this place that the Bishop of Lincoln and his colleagues negotiated the marriage of Edward, Prince of Wales, with the daughter of Phillip, King of France, and that of Edward I., the Prince's father, with the sister of that monarch. LICHTERVELDE, a station of no importance.

ROULERS, a small town picturesquely situated on the Mander, amidst beautiful meadows. The church of St. Michael, to the rear of the west side of the market-place, a small structure with a beautiful spire, and the Stadthuis, an old building situated in the market-place, are worth a visit.

ISEGHEM, a station of no importance, where the railway crosses the Lys, and arrives at COURTRAY.—See route 1.

FROM BRUGES TO COURTRAY.—The trains correspond with the government trains going to Ostend, Ghent, Brussels, Liège, Mouscron, and Tourney, are delivered at Bruges, Thorout, Roulers, Isegheem, and Courtray; and in the great stations tickets are delivered for Bruges, Thorout, Lichtervelde, Isegheem, Courtray. Passengers arriving from Paris by the night train, or

Page 20.

Theatre, Antwerp.

Page 20

Rubens' House, Antwerp.

Page 31.

Les Halles, Ypres.

the Park, most comfortable. Strongly recommended.

the Park, most comfortable.

7 good in every respect, and the largest, handsomest,

most highly recommended

it.

recommended, conducted

Well situated in the Place oderate.

ible and reasonable family

de la Putterie, excellent of the city, between the nd the Grand Place, is very quiet and comfortable, good ce.—"Victoria Mansion,"

Carmes, highly recom-

me, situated between the ition and the Place de la

Chateler, moderate, and Tavern, Rue du Masee.

ft. Board and Lodging on

Wales English Tavern and a Hermosa. Montagne de la eedingly clean and good.

draft; the chops and steaks,

English Establishment, highly respectable people.

ng House.—Mrs. Haydon's, nd d'Or Porte Louise, is most ves our best recommenda-

Introduce the fair city

readers, a city which has

f the warmest eulogiums greatest modern poets—

Southey—and no person present day will say that aggerated or undeserved.

the lower town, observes mansions, its magnificent

e Passage de St. Hubert, reastle part of the com-roceeds to the upper or ity, commencing with the much and make so many stoppages, that the best accommodation is generally engaged before passengers by these vehicles reach their destination.

Place Royal, embellished by the church of St. Jacques sur Caudenberg, with its fresco painting, which is seen to much advantage when the sun from Calais by the 2 a.m. train, will find at Doucroun a train going direct to Ostend.

FROM COURTRAY TO BRUGES.—The trains correspond at Courtray with the trains for Monscon, Tournay, Lille, and Paris, by the Northern Line.

ROUTE 6.

Courtray to Ypres.—There is railway communication opened between these places.

COURTRAY.—Route 1. On this route we pass the village of Bisseghem, near which the Duke of York was defeated in 1738 by General Sonham, losing on the occasion 70 pieces of cannon.

MENIN, a fortified town, situated on the Lys, which separates France from Belgium. It contains a population of 8,000 persons.

YPRES.—(Hotel, La Châtelaine Tete d'Or)—is a fortified town, situated on a beautiful plain, and containing 16,000 inhabitants. This place was formerly very unhealthy, in consequence of the marshes surrounding it, but these having been since drained, much of the fetidness of the climate has departed. In the 14th century it contained 200,000 inhabitants, and kept 4,000 looms constantly at work. It is famous for its manufacture of linen and thread, producing the famous linen which we call diaper, so much used throughout the world.

Les Halles, situated in the great market place. It is a long, low building, very extensive, built in the Gothic style of architecture.

The Cathedral of St. Martin may be worth a visit; it is built in the Gothic style, and contains a very neatly carved pulpit, and a painting, said to be by Van Eyck. The subject of it represents the story of the Fall of Man. In the choir a long stone points out to the visitor the tomb of Jansen, Bishop of Ypres, who died in 1683. He was founder of the sect called the Jansenists, and was long and violently persecuted by the Jesuits.

Brussels.—Caution—Travellers are recommended not to believe cab drivers and omnibus conductors, when they represent certain hotels as being full, but insist on being put down at the house they wish to go to.

We also advise Travellers to proceed direct to the hotel in a cab, as the omnibuses charge as much and make so many stoppages, that the best accommodation is generally engaged before passengers by these vehicles reach their destination.

Hotels:—De l'Europe, a first-rate house, enjoying an excellent reputation. Strongly recommended.

De France, fronting the Park, most comfortable and much commended.

De Saxe, exceedingly good in every respect, and close to the railway.

De l'Univers, one of the largest, handsomest, and best in Brussels.

Belle Vue, one of the most highly recommended hotels on the Continent.

De Flandre—Highly recommended, conducted by Madame Basten.

Grande Bretagne—Well situated in the Place Royale, and charges moderate.

Windsor, a comfortable and reasonable family hotel.

De Hollande, Rue de la Putterie, excellent situation in the heart of the city, between the Park, the Cathedral, and the Grand Place, is very clean, well-conducted, quiet and comfortable, good and reasonable.

Board and Residence.—"Victoria Mansion," 39, Rue des Petits Carmes, highly recommended.

De Russie, Rue Neuve, situated between the Northern Railway Station and the Place de la Monnaie.

Callos' Hotel des Chateaux, moderate, and obliging host.

Bailly's Commercial Tavern, Rue du Musee. Ale and Porter on draft. Board and Lodging on reasonable terms.

Horton's Prince of Wales English Tavern and Chop House, Rue Villa Hermosa, Montagne de la Cour—everything exceedingly clean and good. Ale and Porter iced on draft; the chops and steaks, &c. are first rate.

Madame Dubray's English Establishment, which is frequented by highly respectable people.—51, Rue de Naples.

Boarding and Lodging House.—Mrs. Haydon's, 47, Avenue de la Tolon d'Or Porte Louise, is most respectable, and deserves our best recommendations.

We have now to introduce the fair city of Brussels to our readers, a city which has formed the subject of the warmest eulogiums from three of our greatest modern poets—Byron Scott, and Southey—and no person who visits it in the present day will say that their praises are exaggerated or undeserved. No traveller, visiting the lower town, observes its noble streets and mansions, its magnificent arcade known as the Passage de St. Hubert, inhabited by the mercantile part of the community, and then proceeds to the upper or "west end" of the city, commencing with the Place Royal, embellished by the church of St. Jacques sur Camdenberg, with its fresco paintings, which is seen to much advantage when the sun streams out its setting glories upon it, and illuminates the vivid colours with magical effect and the statue of the crusader, Godfrey of Bouillon, thence to the Place des Palais, and there admires the pleasing coup-d'œil formed by the King's Palace, the Palace of the Prince of Orange, the beautiful and umbrageous Park, the magnificent Rue Royale, the noble buildings in the Rue de la Loi, the splendid view from the Place du Congrès, but what will exclaim that the beauty of the tout ensemble, the neatness and cleanliness of this part of Brussels, render it one of the most charming cities in Europe, and impart a becoming dignity to the seat of the Belgian government.

Its history is replete with a succession of eventful scenes and tragical dramas of the most harrowing description. At one period depopulated by the plague, produced by thirteen months of consecutive rain; at another epoch its citizens decimated by the atrocious cruelties of the Duke of Alva, the Spanish Regent; by civil wars and revolutions; religious persecutions of the Protestants by the Catholics, of the Hebrews by the Christians.

Objects of attraction to be seen in Brussels.—The Town Hall, and Grand Place. The Cathedral and other churches. The Museum. The King's Palace. The Palace of the Duc d'Areberg. The Houses of Parliament. The Botanical Gardens, Porte de Schaerback, and the Zoological Gardens at Ixelles.

The city of Brussels, which is called in French Bruxelles, and in Flemish Brussel, is in the form of a pear, and is built partly on an acclivity, once covered by the forest of Soignie, and partly on a plain, which being intersected by various branches of the river Senne, was a perfect marsh, till a long course of draining and hard cultivation changed it into rich meadow land. Its name is supposed to be derived from Brug-Senne, (bridge over the Senne), corrupted into Brussels and Bruxelles. The climate of Brussels is temperate, and, although extremely variable, and somewhat moist, it is healthy, particularly in the higher part of the town. It has been computed, that during the year, upon an average, there are seventeen days of snowy weather, eleven of hail, and one hundred and forty-nine of rain. The manufactures of Brussels consist principally of its far-famed lace; printed cottons; carriages, remarkable for their elegance, comfort, light appearance, and solidity; beer of generally esteemed quality; printing and hanging papers; lithographic and printing establishments, especially of books; typefoundries; sugar refineries; horse hair and woollen stuffs; brass and iron foundries; painted porcelain; furniture; soaps; gold and silver lace, and chemical productions. The method of counting money is in francs and centimes, the coin adopted by government. Having adopted all the French decimal measures, the metre is used, in Bruxelles, for long measure, the kilogramme for weight, and the litre for liquid measure.

The Royal Square, or La Place Royale, is one of the beautiful executions of the last century, by the architect Guyman. It presents a monumental aspect, and is remarkable for the grand regularity of its appearance. It is, however, to be deeply regretted that the triumphal entries had to be removed, owing to the necessity of making way for the establishment of convenient communications between the different parts of the city. An equestrian statue of Godfrey de Bouillon, the celebrated chief of the First Crusade, adorns the square. It is a fine work of art in bronze, by M. E. Simons.

The Park is an enclosure in the higher town, forming a square divided into avenues, lined with trees, and intersected by beautiful walks ornamented with statues. It is a favourite promenade with the people of Brussels, and has three principal walks, planted with lofty trees. On Sundays, during summer, when the weather is fine, a military band plays from a pavilion near the green basin, or round garden, for the amusement of the promenaders of all classes, who move hither in crowds on these occasions. No time can be better selected by a stranger, for forming an idea of the luxury and fashion of Brussels than this, when a concert is given in the open air. This Park was the principal scene of action in the revolution of 1830; the marks of the bullets are yet to be seen in the trees. A fine basin in the centre, plentifully stocked with gold and silver fish, adds to the attractions of this delightful spot. On each side the principal walk, two valleys offer an agreeable retreat from the heat of the sun. In the valley to the right, a square basin of blue marble is deposited, which bears the following inscription:—

Page 31.

View of Brussels.

Page 32.

Place Royale.

Page 33.

Palais de la Nation.

Source: U.S. Census Bureau, Bureau of Economic Analysis, and Social Security Administration, "Social Security Trustees Report 2002," Table 1.1.

"Petrus Alexovitz, Czar Magnus, Muscovice Dux, insidens margini hujus, fontes, aquam illius, nobilitavit; libato vino, hora post meridiem, tertis die 16 Aprilis anni 1717."

Which done into English, signifies that on such a day Peter the Great of Russia, being intoxicated, fell into this fountain.

The following are the principal buildings surrounding the Park :—

The King's Palace.—A large and vast edifice, presenting in its exterior neither attraction nor beauty. Its interior is magnificently furnished. Under the French, this Palace was the Hôtel de la Préfecture. Napoleon and the Empress Josephine lodged in it in 1807, and Maria Louise in 1811. It has, however, several suites of very noble rooms.

The Gallery of Paintings collected by King Leopold, is well worth visiting; moreover, there are several paintings of peculiar interest to English visitors: viz.: a portrait of the lamented Princess Charlotte, a beautiful one of the late Queen of the Belgians, several others of great merit and interest; for instance, those of the King of the French and his Queen, Marie Amélie; and last, though not least, two full length portraits of Queen Victoria and Prince Albert, by Winterhalter.

The Palace of the Prince of Orange is close to the King's Palace. The late King of Holland erected it at the cost of the city, and presented it to that Prince, but is now appropriated to the use of the Duke de Brabant.

The Chambers of Representatives, or Palais de la Nation, are situated in the Rue de la Loi. They were built by the Empress Maria Theresa. There is nothing very remarkable connected with them, nor is there any object of attraction within them to particularise, except three pictures, one by Wappers, the Belgium Trois jour, the Battle of Woeringen, by De Keyser, and the Battle of Waterloo.—It is entered from behind the Rue de l'Orangerie. Strangers are admitted during the debates.

The Museum, or Le Palais des Beaux arts et de l'Industrie is destined, as its name indicates, as a repository for the works of art and of national industry.

The first object of attraction in it is the Picture Gallery, which contains in its collection several remarkable productions of the great masters of the Flemish school. We first direct attention to the works of the foreign schools, of which we give a brief notice. We make, however, one exception to this rule, in directing attention to an admirably executed little portrait of the Chancellor, Sir Thomas More, by Holbein. Passing from this gem of the German school to the Italian collection, we notice two paintings attributed to Titian.—We next notice the Noces de Cana, by Paul Veronèse, and another splendid work by the same master, St. Catherine adoring Jesus. The Holy Family will be found in this collection.

The Venice Collection contains Christ calling St. Peter, a Young Man placed under the protection of the Virgin by his patrons, Saints Nicholas, Louis Francis, and Joseph: this is an excellent painting, combining, with a happy arrangement, a brilliant execution. The Flight into Egypt and Adam and Eve, by Guido, are worth notice. The Italian school has, also, a Job visited by his Friends, and a St. Sebastian, the latter by Procaccini.

The French School contains the Saviour giving His Benediction, by Leconte, a small St. Charles Borromeo, by Vouet, and a Calvary, by Courtois, &c. The other principal paintings to be seen in the gallery, are seven attributed to Rubens. Among them are the four following, which bear traces of that great master's style, the Martyrdom of St. Livien, the Adoration of the Magi, Christ falling under the Cross, and a Christ in the Tomb. St. Peter fishing, by De Crayer, Interior of Antwerp Cathedral, by Neefs. Very many valuable paintings, purchased at the King of Holland's sale, have been added to the collection, which, in all amounts to 300 paintings. The Collections of Painting and Natural History are open to the public on Sundays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays, but strangers can gain admittance on other occasions by exhibiting their passport. The works of Wappers, Gallat, De Keyser, and Verboekhoven are well worth attention, as specimens of the modern Belgian school of paintings. They are to be seen in the ante-room.

The Burgundian Library, containing ten thousand manuscripts, is well worth an inspection. The collection is an exceedingly valuable one, collected by the Dukes of Burgundy. The manuscripts are rich in precious miniature paintings, executed by Van Eyck's scholars. The Carrollian of Hainault, the Psalter of Louis de Mâle, and the Missal of Matthias Corvinus, King of Hungary, should be seen. The Library contains 200,000 volumes, and has been formed by the union of the libraries of the State with that of Van Hulthem, purchased at a cost of 815,000*fr.* It is open each day, Sunday excepted, from nine to three. The reading room is exceedingly comfortable.

In the same building is the Museum of Natural History. In it are a series of the volcanic products of Vesuvius, and of the fossils of Maestrecht. Its zoological and mineralogical department contain some interesting specimens. In this building lectures are given on the various branches of science, at the expense of government, and to them all are admitted free.

Hôtel de Ville, in the Grand Place, is unquestionably one of the most beautiful monuments of Brussels, and one of the most magnificent of Belgium's municipal palaces. It stands on an elevated spot by itself, and commands the admiration of all visitors. The structure was commenced in 1401, and finished in 1411, after the plan of an architect called Van Ruysbroeck, and is built in the Lombardo Gothic style. The chief object of wonder of the building is the lofty tower, of Gothic open work, three hundred and sixty-four feet high, surmounting the principal façade. It formerly stood at the end of the building. The tower is crowned by a gilt copper figure of St. Michael, which serves as a weathercock, and is seventeen feet high. On the tapestries preserved in the interior, is represented the Abdication of Charles V., which took place in 1556, in the old Ducal Palace, burned down in 1733. This tower, so remarkable for its antiquity and architectural beauty, has lately undergone repair, and is now restored to its original perfection. The carvings and ornamental work were effaced during the French revolution. Critics, however, find fault with the architect for not placing the tower in the centre of the edifice.

The Place is one of the most singular in Europe, being a regular parallelogram, the four sides of which, though ornamented with buildings dissimilar in shape, and in the form of the architecture, is nevertheless consistent with the general plan. This square is larger than it appears to be. Opposite the Hôtel de Ville which is situated in this square, we see the Maison du Roi, built in 1616, after a plan by Keldermans, architect to Charles V. In this house the Counts, Egmont and Horn, passed the night previous to their execution, which took place in the Grand Square, and was witnessed, from a window, by Alva, by whose directions they were beheaded. Several of the buildings formerly belonged to corporate trades or companies who seemed to have endeavoured to surpass each other in the expenses they incurred for embellishments, and embodying the various forms of architecture introduced into the Low Countries, viz., a compound or the Gothic and the Morisco, equally as astonishing for its lightness and its boldness, as for the beauty of its forms, and the harmony of its proportions, introduced by the Spanish, who copied it from the Moors.

The Collegiate Church of St. Gudule is dedicated to St. Michael, patron of the city, and St. Gudule, niece of Pepin of Landen. The grand front in the Rue de la Cathédrale, surmounted by two lofty towers, which would have been carried considerably higher had there been sufficient funds. The original plan was to have thrown an arch over them at their present elevation, and to have reared upon it a third steeple. In the ninth age the site of this magnificent church was occupied by a mill. Lambert, Count of Louvain, erected there a temple, which was finished in 1047, at which period the body of St. Gudule, which had been preserved in the church of Saint Gery, was translated thither. A chapter of twelve canons was founded, which was afterwards carried to twenty-two. Henry, Duke of Brabant, demolished this temple in 1226; the present structure was commenced immediately afterwards, but was not finished till 1275. The workmen employed upon it earned daily a small coin called a brass pfénning; this pittance seems, however, to have been commensurate with the price of provisions at that period. The following dates mark some of the principal events connected with the church of St. Gudule: a whole volume would be insufficient to name them all:—

- 1435. The first meeting of the chapter order of the Golden Fleece, by Philip the Good.
- 1481. A synod of the diocese was held here, whose acts are preserved in manuscript.
- 1516. Grand meeting of the eighteenth chapter of the order of the Golden Fleece, by Charles V.

It is of Gothic architecture, in the form of a

Page 33.

Museum.

Page 33.

Grand Place.

Page 33.

Maison du Roi.

cross, and is divided into three aisles. The grand entrance is approached by a flight of thirty-six steps. It was formerly ornamented with paintings in water-colours, executed on the walls, towards the close of the art, and it is to be regretted that they have been covered over with plaster. The side aisles are separated from the nave by pillars that support the roof, which is very lofty. Against each pillar rests a statue, ten feet from the floor. Those representing St. Peter and St. Philip are by Van Milder; those of St. Paul, St. Bartholomew, and St. Matthias, are by Jerome Dugernay, and are very superior to the others; the statue of St. John, St. James minor, and St. Matthew, are the work of Tobias Faidherbe; and those of St. James the major, and St. Simon, of Luke Faidherbe; the sculptor of that of St. Andrew is unknown. The pulpit, raised in the middle of the nave, is very remarkable. It was executed by Henry Verbruggen, of Antwerp, for the Jesuits of Louvain, in 1699. After their suppression, it was presented by Maria Theresa to the church of St. Gudule, where it was placed in 1776. This fine piece of sculpture may be said to be an epitome of Milton's sublime poem. Adam and Eve are represented, the size of life, as sustaining the globe; an Angel drives them from Paradise, and Death pursues them; the figure and countenance of Adam are admirably expressive. The cavity of the globe forms the pulpit, which rests on the tree of good and evil, laden with fruit, and decorated with appropriate animals; by the side of Adam are an eagle and an ostrich, and by that of Eve, a peacock, a parrot, and an ape. At the top of the tree is a canopy, supported by two angels, and by a female exhibiting the symbol of Truth. Beneath is the Virgin holding the Infant Jesus and a cross, with which they both crush the head of a serpent, whose body writhes about the tree.

Before proceeding farther, let us turn round to admire the choir lately erected, in such a manner as to throw open the magnificent representation of the Last Judgment, painted on, or rather in, glass, by Floris, usually called Frank Wils. This is superior to the paintings on glass executed by Van Aek, which are seen over the two doors in front of the choir. The organ, which is one of the finest in the country, was built by M. Devolder, of Ghent. In the aisles are eighteen pictures of inferior merit, representing the history of the host, which, according to tradition, was in the year 1870 carried off, and stabbed by some Jews, in their synagogue, situated in the Rue de Salazar, where, as we have already said, a chapel has since been erected. Five Jews were burnt alive on the occasion, on the spot which is now occupied by the hotel of the Duke of Arenberg. The mutilated host, from which blood is said to have issued, having been collected together, was restored with great solemnity, and from this period is dated the festival of the St. Sacrement des Miracles, which is celebrated every year, on the first Sunday after the 15th of July. It is then, too, that the kermesse of Brussels is held. On the same occasion are exhibited, during several days, in the church of St. Gudule, some large and splendid pieces of tapestry, on which are storied the interesting traditions just mentioned.

The Chapel called that of the Holy Sacrament of Miracles, at the left of the grand choir, was rebuilt in 1539. It is of large dimensions, having four windows, beautifully painted by Roger, of Brussels. The old tabernacle, which was of massive silver, was removed in 1792. The new one contains a Remonstrance in the shape of a sun in solid gold, enriched by precious stones; in this are deposited several of the miraculous hosts. The design of the altar-piece is grand, but it is overcharged with ornament. Rubens furnished the plan of the altar-piece, which was formerly raised in the centre of the church. On the right side of the altar of the Holy Sacrament is placed the monumental stone which covers the tomb of the Archduke Albert, whose remains were deposited there in 1621, invested with a friar's habit, and of the Infanta Isabella, who was buried there in 1633, in the costume of a nun of the order of St. Clare. Several other members of the same illustrious house were afterwards entombed in this vault, but were taken up and translated to Vienna in 1749. The same tomb also encloses the remains of Prince Charles of Lorraine, who died at Tervueren in 1780, very deeply regretted by the citizens of Brussels. Between this chapel and that of St. Mary Magdalen, which is very lofty, is seen a piece of wood fixed to the wall; this is a fraction of the beam in which the miraculous host was concealed during the troubles which lasted from 1579 to 1586.

Over the door of the sacristy is a small bald length figure of the Virgin, said to be the production of Francis Duquesnoy; whoever may have been the artist, it is considered a little chef-d'œuvre, the Infant in particular being finished with exquisite beauty.

The Chapel of the Virgin, styled Notre Dame was constructed in 1653, at a cost of 56,823 florins raised from the voluntary subscriptions of the citizens. The four windows are painted by Delabaer, of Antwerp. They represent the principal events connected with the life of the Virgin, and exhibits portraits of the Emperors Ferdinand and Leopold I., of the Archduke Albert with the Infanta Isabella, and the Archduke Leopold. The altar, which is of black and white marble, was designed by Verspael. The Virgin over it was executed by Arnold Quellin.

The high altar of the church is modern, dating only from 1743; a widow Laving bequeathed a sum of 18,000 florins for the purpose of erecting one in white marble, this was raised on the plan of the architect Doukers. It is of the composite order, and owes the sculptured ornaments to the chisel of the elder Derooy. At the sides of the sanctuary are two statues of white marble, by Delvaux, one of St. Martin and the other of St. Benedict. They were brought from the Abbey of Affghem, and were at one time destined for the Museum at Paris. The tabernacle is very rich; by an ingenious piece of mechanism the Remonstrance is lowered from it into the hands of the officiating priest. Above the altar is a square table, the top of which bears the arms of the Duke of Brabant. On the left is a superb mausoleum of black marble, named the tomb of the Dukes of Brabant, upon which reposes a brass gilt lion resting on a cushion. This figure, which weighs six thousand pounds, was cast in 1610, by Jerome de Montfort. The Archduke Albert erected this mausoleum to the memory of John II, Duke of Brabant, who died in 1312, of his wife Margaret, daughter of Edward, King of England, deceased in 1318, and of Philip I, who died in 1430. Some writers affirm that this monument encloses the ashes of Philip the Good but this is doubted. Opposite to this mausoleum and on the other side of the choir, is the sepulchral monument of Archduke Ernest, who died at Brussels 1595. This prince, clothed in mail, reposes on a cushion. His sword, armour, spurs, and gloves are near him, and there appears his motto, "Soli Deo Gloria." The choir is lighted by five windows, painted by Abraham Van Diepenbach, a pupil of Rubens. The loss of this style of art has long been regretted, but it is believed that an artist of Tournay, named Martel-èque, has succeeded in restoring it. Two village scenes, each on one piece of glass, were exhibited by him a short time ago.

The Square of the Mint, or Place de la Monnaie, notwithstanding its irregularity, is one of the handsomest in the city; it possesses some elegant coffee-houses, the principal of which are the Suisse and the Mille colonnes, equal to any of the kind in Paris. It takes its name from the Mint, which faces the portico of the Royal Theatre. This square is the resort of fashionable loungers, speculators in the funds, chroniclers of false news, and of the dilettante, who swarm about the theatre.

The Church of St. Nicolas is of irregular but handsome architecture. It was considered the finest in Brussels. This church possesses a rich collection of paintings. The high altar is adorned by a production of Van Helmon, representing Jesus Christ restoring health to the child of Canaan. The chapel of the Virgin has two good paintings by Janssens, one representing Joshua annihilating the Amalechites; the other, David penitent; two by Van Orler, St. Peter released by an Angel and St. Roch curing the infected, are appreciated by connoisseurs. There is a picture placed against one of the pillars which is much admired, and is supposed to be by Rubens; it is a half length figure of the Virgin regarding with tenderness her sleeping Infant. It is difficult to conceive any thing more touching, or more charmingly executed, the drawing being extremely correct, and the flesh naturally coloured. This picture was presented to the church by a curate of the parish, who died some years since. Near the altar of the dead, is the chef-d'œuvre of a modern painter, d'Herreyne, of Malines; the subject is the Last Supper.

We next come upon the Sablon, so named from its having been covered with sand instead of being paved, in order to facilitate the exercise of troops, to which this square was appropriated. It is the largest in the town, and, although irregular, is very handsome. In the centre of it is a magnificent fountain of white marble, which Lord Bruce, Earl of Alesbury, who had lived in Brussels forty years, ordered in his will to be

Page 34.

Church of St. Gudule.

Page 34.

Confessional of St. Gudule.

Page 36.

Notre Dame De la Chapelle.

Page 24. St. Gudule's Gate.

Page 25. Pulpit in St. Gudule's.

26. Tomb of the Archduke Ernest.

Interior of the Church of the Sablon.

erected as a grateful memorial to the inhabitants of this city, of the kindness he had experienced from them, and the happiness he had ever enjoyed there. This admirable piece is by Berge. It represents Minerva seated, and holding the portraits of Maria Theresa and Francis I; on the right is Fame, on the left the Scheldt; a genius holds the eagle of Minerva. Lord Bruce occupied a house close to the Sablon church. His nephew raised this group of white Genoa marble, after a model furnished by the Count Callenberg; beneath are the arms of Lord Bruce, well sculptured. The railing round the monument is wire. We now proceed up the Petit Sablon, which formerly served as a cemetery, bleaching-ground, and stabling for the brotherhood of the Holy Ghost, of which we just now spoke. This place presents nothing of interest except the Hôtel d'Areemberg, where Rousseau long resided on a pension of fifteen hundred francs, with admission to the Duke's table.

Palais d'Areemberg, 17, Place du Petit Sablon. In the palace, which is richly and magnificently adorned, is a very select gallery of paintings, by the Dutch and Flemish school. The chief ones are by de Hooghe, Rembrandt, and Jean Steen, together with some Etruscan antiquities, and old furniture. A head of the famous Laocoon may be seen in the library, and the palace can be seen in the absence of the family.

The worthy descendant of the Prince has embellished his hotel, already admired for its architecture and vastness, with the productions of art. It possesses a number of vases and varieties from Herculaneum and Pompeii, and the original head of the Laocoon. A gallery of paintings by the first masters, increased of late by that of the late Prince d'Areemberg, and a magnificent garden, render the mansion constructed on the site of that of the unfortunate Count of Egmond, one of the objects most worthy of admiration in this city.

The Allée Verte is nearly a mile and a half in length. It is the chief summer resort of the gay and fashionable residents of the elegant metropolis, who here exhibit their handsome equipages or mingle among the promenaders of this favourite spot. Being planted with four rows of old and lofty linden trees, having a very elegant iron gate at its entrance, and possessing an agreeable coolness from the canal by the side of it, it was once, particularly on Sundays in summer, the rendezvous of the wealthy and fashionable of the Boulevards. The Botanic Garden is 600 metres long and 160 broad. The edifice which crowns its gentle slope presents a front of about 140 feet, its centre being occupied by a rotunda, encircled by a colonnade, and surmounted by a dome. The wings which, together with the rotunda, are of glass, form on each side a gallery, terminated by a square building resembling the portico of a temple.

From the green-houses we descend by a gradation of small terraces, adorned with fountains, to the garden, which is circular, and contains properly classed and immense varieties of plants, offering a vast study to the naturalist.

The Botanical Garden of Brussels is declared by travellers to surpass in beauty, magnificence, and richness, every other in Europe, except that of Paris—the coup-d'œil is admirable, but to be seen in perfection this fairy place and garden should be visited when illuminated, as it annually is, during the fetes of September, commemorative of the revolution. This institution belongs to the Horticultural Society, who give annual exhibitions of flowers to that institution.

The Prison des Petits Carmes stands on the site of the Hotel de Cuylenbourg, close to the Place Petit Sablon. In the reign of Philip the II. the Protestant Confederates met in this hotel, and in it prepared, in 1566, the petition called the "Request." On its being presented to Margaret of Parma, the vice Queen, it is recorded that one of the courtiers whispered to her, "Not to be annoyed by such a parcel of beggars." The Confederates looked upon the epithet as a title of honour rather than of reproach, under the circumstances in which it was applied, adopted it as their nom de guerre, and appeared on the balcony that evening after supper with wallets on their backs and porringers in their hands, and drank success to the Geux! This little event tended to fan the flame which soon kindled into revolution. The Duke of Alva had the building where the Confederate meetings were held levelled to the ground.

The Theatre Royal is a very fine and interesting building, erected in 1817, after plans by M. De-mesme, at a cost of 1,400,000*fr.* The other theatres are the Theatre du Park, Theatre des Nouveautés, and Theatre du Vaudeville.

The Place des Martyrs is one of the most beautiful squares in Brussels, notwithstanding that the streets surrounding it are uninteresting, without appearance, and badly arranged. In this square is erected a splendid monument to the memory of the three hundred "braves Belges," killed in the Revolution, 1830. This monument is placed in the middle of the square and consists of a pedestal having on each of its four corners kneeling geniuses, and surmounted by a statue of Liberty. A sort of subterranean gallery runs around it, in which the slain were interred, and the name of each victim is inscribed around on slabs of black and white marble. The statue represents Belgium inscribing on a slab the dates of the memorable events of September. At the foot of the statue is crouched a lion. The monument is surrounded by iron railings. This monument is one of the most beautiful works of the celebrated sculptor, M. Geefs.

The Porte de Hal is a large gateway, after the Gothic style, erected in 1381. It served as a battle for Alva during his sanguinary persecution of the Protestants. It now serves as a kind of museum, and contains a very interesting collection, among which is the cradle of Charles V., and a font from Tirlemont, dated 1149, together with many other very interesting antiquities.

The Royal Square, or La Place Royale, is one of the beautiful executions of the last century, by the architect Guymai. It presents a monumental aspect, and is remarkable for the grand regularity of its appearance. It is, however, to be deeply regretted that the triumphal entries had to be removed, owing to the necessity of making way for the establishment of convenient communications between the different parts of the city. An equestrian statue of Godfrey de Bouillon, the celebrated chief of the First Crusade, adorns the square. It is an execution in bronze, by M. E. Simmons.

September, 1845, will be memorable in the history of this fine old city as the days on which the First Peace Congress, consisting of 150 gentlemen from England, Scotland, and Wales, together with delegates from various parts of the Continent, assembled therein, to enunciate their principles—for the promotion of universal peace—for the settlement of international differences by arbitration—and to call the attention of governments to the advantages of a measure of general disarmament, as conducive to a friendly understanding among the nations, and tending directly to prepare the way for the formation of a general Congress of Nations. The proceedings of the convention, from their novelty, and the influential and talented character of the assembled representatives, excited the greatest interest. The reception given to the delegates, both at Ostend and Brussels, was extremely gratifying; and we can but hope that this exposition of the principles of peace before the world may be the herald of that day "when nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

A valet-de-place may be hired for 5fr. per day.

The Post-office, at the top of Rue de la Montagne, is open from 5 till 9. Postage stamps are in use throughout the kingdom: single rate for one-third of an oz. 10 centimes for 30 kil. (about 16½ miles); 20 centimes for all distances above; prepayment optional. Between Belgium and all France the stamp is 40 centimes; between Belgium and all England 60 centimes, or 8d. Letters posted here at 5 p.m. will be distributed in London at 10 the next morning. Letters put in before 5 p.m. will be delivered in Paris the next day, and before 7 a.m., the same evening in Paris. The following is a list of the offices for obtaining passports:—France, 146, Rue Royale Neuve; Austria, 9, Rue Belliard, Quartier Leopold; English Embassy, Rue Belliard, Quartier Leopold; Prussian Embassy in Brussels, 37, Rue des Petit Carmes.

The King's Palaces may be viewed during his Majesty's absence. The Museum is open every Sunday, Monday, and Thursday, from 10 till 3, and every other day to strangers on producing their passports. The Duke d'Arenberg's Palace daily, by applying to the porter, and producing a passport. The Town Hall daily, from 10 till 5, (gratis). The two Houses of Parliament daily, from 10 till 3. The Botanical Garden (gratis) every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, from 9 till 5. The Passport Office is at the Hôtel de Ville, and is open daily from 10 for the first dispatch, and before 5 45 p.m. for the second, via France. Letters, &c., forwarded by the former are delivered in London by 9 in the morning, and by the latter by 1 p.m. the day after their leaving Brussels. Theatre Royal de la Monnaie.—Performances every evening. Theatre des Galeries

Page 37.

Allée Verte.

Page 37.

Botanical Gardens.

Page 37.

Theatre Royal

Page 36. Sablon Fountain.

Statue of General Belliard.

Page 38. Monument in the Place des Martyrs

Church of the Augustines.

Saint Hubert performances every evening. Concert in the Park every evening during the summer.

CARRIAGES AND SADDLE HORSES.—Travellers wishing to go to Waterloo can do so by the Mail Coaches, or if they wish to visit different objects of interest in Brussels and the environs, Laeken or Boitsfort, may obtain good vehicles or saddle horses, at reasonable rates, of J. Suffels, 17, Rue Villa Hermosa, Montagne de la Cour, and of J. Coper, 23, Esplanade, Porte de Namur.

In conclusion we may remark that it is customary for travellers passing through Belgium, to sojourn and rest during the Sabbath in Brussels, as it offers the advantage of possessing several Protestant places of worship.

Church of England Service.—On Sundays, at the Chapel Royal, Rue du Musée, at 9 a.m., and 2½ p.m. by the Rev. M. J. Blacker, B.A.; in the chapel, on the Boulevard de l'Observatoire at 12½ and 3½ p.m., by the Rev. W. Drury, M.A.; and at the Evangelical Chapel, Rue Belliard, by the Rev. G. P. Keogh, at 9½ a.m. and 3 p.m.

ENGLISH DIRECTORY OF BRUSSELS.

RAILWAY TERMINI.—The terminus of the Northern line communicating with Antwerp, Ostend, Ghent, Bruges, Lille, Malines, Louvain, Liege, Verviers, Aix-la-Chapelle, and Cologne, is outside the Port de Cologne. That of the Southern line for Mons, Namur, Valenciennes, and Paris, is designated the station du Midi.

Professional Gentlemen recommended by the Editors.

PHYSICIANS.—Dr. Parkinson, F.R.C.S.I., Rue de la Pepiniere, is much esteemed among the English resident in Brussels, and we can highly recommend him from our own experience.

DENTIST.—Mr. J. Alex, 3, Place Belliard, opposite the Park, surgeon-dentist to His Majesty King Leopold. Mr. Alex, having been established in Brussels during the last eighteen years, has acquired the confidence of the English and Belgian medical profession, and his appointment as honorary dentist to the King of the Belgians proves the high estimation in which his talents are held in this country.—See advertisement page.

SOLICITORS.—Maltby and Reid, 4, Rue de la Paille.

BRITISH VICE-CONSULATE.—J. T. Maltby, of the above firm, British Vice-Consul. Office hours, from 11 to 2. 4, Rue de la Paille.

GENERAL STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY'S OFFICE, 94, Montagne de la Cour.

DAILY EXPRESS OFFICE, for the daily conveyance of small parcels, samples, law papers, &c., simultaneously with the mails, 74, Montagne de la Cour.

ENGLISH BANKERS.—The old English Bank and Exchange Office are now at No. 8, Rue Royale. Messrs. Salter and Bigwood correspond with the Union Bank of London: the firms of Messrs. Chas. Hoare and Co. and Messrs. Martin and Co., London; Oriental Bank Corporation; Messrs. Duncan and Co., New York.

BOARDING SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES.—We can confidently recommend the establishment referred to in the advertisement, "Superior Protestant Education," page 441, of Bradshaw's Continental Guide.

LACE.—We recommend with all confidence the establishment of M. Vanderkelen Bresson, No 248, or 1, Rue du Marquis, near the Cathedral of St. Gudule; and we advise the ladies to postpone making any purchases until they have seen the above stock. Awarded the Prize Medal by the commissioners of the Great Exhibition, and a Gold Medal by the Belgian Government. Visitors should be particular in not mistaking the house, or confounding this establishment with others, which may be easily avoided, as the name is on the door.

GLOVES.—There are so many shops for this article that we can scarcely expect ladies to abide implicitly by our recommendation; but, from personal experience, confirmed by general repute, we advise them not to purchase until they have seen the gloves of Mr. Auvray, 9, Passage des Princes, Galeries St. Hubert.

NOUVEAUTES.—A visit to the extensive Fabrique Européenne et des Indes of M. Gluzeau Aimé, 26, Rue de la Montagne, facing the General Post Office, will remind the ladies of the best house in London, and they may rely on all the articles being what they are represented to be.

TAILOR.—Travellers will find a large stock of ready-made wearing apparel, of the best fashion, at T. B. Collard's, 42, Rue de la Madeleine, and at most reasonable prices. Orders are promptly executed, which is a great consideration for tourists. Mr. Collard has also branch establishments at Ghent, Namur, and Charleroi.

Excursions from Brussels.

WATERLOO.—Hotel: Brasserie.

The excursion to Waterloo is a very pleasant one indeed—through the forest of Soignes. Few English or American travellers who visit Brussels, can refrain from going to Waterloo and Mount St. Jean, the Chateau of Hougomont, La Haie Sainte, Quatre Bras, &c., which, with their exciting associations, are as attractive as ever.

The expense of a party going to Waterloo was formerly 27 francs, but this has been reduced to a more reasonable price by the spirit of English enterprise. Instead of the close vigilante, or lumbering carriage, there are now two English four-horse Mail Coaches, belonging to Messrs. Copper and Sutfell, which run daily between Brussels and Mount St. Jean on the field of Waterloo. Fares, 5 francs there and back!! Ladies in particular will find these conveyances by far the most agreeable and unexceptionable, as a two-horse branch coach conveys the passengers from the village of Mount St. Jean across the field to Hougomont, thus obviating all fatigue on a sultry day, and inconvenience in unfavourable weather. The "Warrior" starts from the Hotel de l'Univers, at 9 a.m., and the "Victoria" from the Hotel de Saxe, at 10 a.m., calling at the Hotel de l'Univers, and both taking up passengers, a short time after, at the Hotel "Grande Bretagne," on the Place Royale, returning to Brussels in time for the Table d'Hôte. We strongly recommend travellers to secure their places, for the day they wish to go, immediately on their arrival in Brussels, at Sutfell's, No. 17, Rue Villa Hermosa, Montagne de la Cour; or of J. Copper, 23, Esplanade, Port de Namur.

These conveyances render a visit to Waterloo agreeable and cheap, but as they interfere with the parties who formerly let out vehicles for Waterloo, these coaches are opposed by Walters and Commissioners. We therefore think it right to warn our readers, that if they mention "Waterloo," attempts will be made to dissuade them from going by the "Mail Coaches," though we hope unsuccessfully, as these conveyances are decidedly the best, being respectfully conducted by steady English coachmen; and considering that the proprietors are two industrious Englishmen, who have established these coaches for the conveyance of travellers, we think they are entitled to the support of their fellow-countrymen.

The proprietors of the above conveyances having made arrangements with Sergt. Martin Visieur to accompany all passengers by the said coaches over the field, they are recommended to pay a franc in addition to the fare, to include the services of the above Guide. This of course does not apply to passengers by other conveyances, and it is therefore another advantage of going by the Mail Coaches.

Travellers wishing to possess a concise and authentic history of the celebrated battle, should purchase "The Voice from Waterloo," by the late Sergeant-major Cotton, to be had at the Waterloo Museum, at the foot of the Lion Mount.

Waterloo is a large and handsome village. Its church is an elegant rotunda, adorned by a neat frontispiece, bearing an inscription, which states that the Marquis of Castanaga, governor of the Low Countries, laid the first stone of the church in 1690. The hamlet of Mount St. Jean is a little beyond Waterloo. The French named the battle of the 18th June, 1815, after this hamlet, Mont St. Jean; the victorious armies, as it is well known, called it after the village of Waterloo. Plancenois, where the farm of La Belle Alliance is situated, is still a little further on.

The road from Brussels to Waterloo lies for the greater part through the Forest of Soignes, and except the view of the town obtained near the village of Izelles, presents no feature worthy of observation.

Byron, using a poetical license, describes the march of the British troops through the forest in the following beautiful lines:—

"Ardenness weaves above them her green leaves,
Dewy with nature's tear drops, as they pass,
Grieving, if ought inanimate's her groans,
O'er the unreturning brave. Alas!
'Ere evening to be trodden like the grass
Which now beneath them, but above shall grow
In its next verdure, when its fiery mass
Of living valour, rolling on the foe,
And burning with high hope, shall moulder cold and low."

This forest is nine miles long, and about eight broad.

The village of Waterloo receives us immediately on leaving the forest, but contains nothing to attract our attention, except the elegant little church, surmounted by a handsome dome, and containing several marble tablets to the memory of those who fell in the contest, and the house in which the leg of Lord Uxbridge was amputated. The spot in the garden in which the shattered member was buried, is designated by a small monument. In this church are thirty tablets and monuments, melancholy memorials of the horrible vicissitudes of war, of its victims the English officers who fell on that memorable field.

Palais de Justice.

The Grand Hospice.

Place de Palais, Brussels.

"Many a wounded Briton there was laid,
With such poor help as time might then allow,
From the fresh carnage of the field conveyed.
And they, whom human succour could not save,
Here in its precincts found a hasty grave.
And here, on marble tablets set on high,
In English lines, by foreign workmen trac'd,
Are names familiar to an English eye;
Their brethren here the fit memorials plac'd,
Whose unadorned inscriptions briefly tell
Their gallant comrades' rank and where they fell."

SOUTHEY.

It was in this village that the Duke of Wellington established his head quarters on the night of the 17th of June, 1815. About a mile beyond Waterloo we pass through the hamlet of Mount St. Jean, and leaving the road to Nivelles on the right, we proceed in the direction of Genappe and Charleroi, and soon after arrive at the farm of Mount St. Jean, which was immediately in the rear of the centre of the British line. Proceeding further on the road to Charleroi, we arrive at la Belle-alliance, a farm-house and hamlet situated on the opposite ridge, and corresponding with the farm of Mount St. Jean. This is the extent of the scene of the tourist's observation; and before drawing his attention to the minute localities, we proceed to recall to his mind the principal events, of those memorable battles. The campaign of 1815 was remarkable for its brief duration—it lasted but four days; yet, in that short space of time, more than 50,000 human beings were swept from the face of the earth by the ruthless hand of war. On the 15th of June, the French army, commanded by the Emperor Napoleon in person, and consisting of about 130,000 men, 20,000 of whom were the old imperial guards, all well equipped, and accompanied by a numerous train of artillery, passed the Sambre, and having defeated some regiments of Prussians, took possession of Charleroi, a town, at that time, without defence. On the 16th, they advanced into the plains of Fleurus, where the fate of Belgium has thrice been decided, and at Ligny attacked the Prussian army, whose commander, Field-Marshal Blücher narrowly escaped being taken prisoner, he had been thrown from his horse in the midst of the action, and surrounded on all sides by the pursuing enemy, whose precipitation alone prevented their recognizing the marshal's person. A momentary repulse of the French by a body of Prussian cavalry, afforded Blücher time to be extricated from his perilous situation and mounted on a dragoon horse. The French took some pieces of artillery and remained masters of the field. While these operations were rapidly carrying on, a strong column of French troops advanced towards Quatre-bras, a point of junction of four roads, nearly twenty miles from Brussels, on the road to Charleroi, where the Prince of Orange was posted with a division composed partly of Belgian and partly British troops. A warm action took place, in which the young prince displayed the greatest bravery and ability, and the Duke of Brunswick was killed at the head of his famous black corps, so called from wearing a black uniform, out of respect to the memory of the duke, his father, who was mortally wounded at the battle of Jena. During the night this division of the troops fell back upon Waterloo, to join the Duke of Wellington, commander-in-chief of the Anglo-Belgian army, who had his head-quarters in that village; his troops were posted in front of the forest of Solignies, in an extensive line, covered by entrenchments, and defended by a numerous train of artillery. This position occupied a line of about one mile and a half in length, the centre being in front of the farmhouse of Mount St. Jean; the left extending along the ridge, until the extreme flank reached a hamlet called Smouken, and a farm-house named Papelotte, and having in front the farm of La Haye-Sainte, whence a succession of broken roads formed a precarious communication with Blücher's position at Wavre; and the right stretching along the same heights, following their direction in a semicircular slope backwards, until the extreme flank rested on Marle-Braine, where it was protected by a ravine. The right of the British army, extending along the same eminence, occupied and protected the Nivelles Road as far as the enclosures of Hougomont. The ground in front of the British position sloped easily down into lower ground, forming a sort of valley—not a level plain, but a declivity, varied by many gentle sweeps and hollows, as if formed by the course of a river. The ground then ascends in the same manner to a ridge opposite to that of Mount St. Jean, and running parallel to it at the distance of twelve or fourteen hundred yards. This was the position of the enemy. The valley between the two ridges is entirely open and uninclosed, and on that memorable day bore a tall and strong crop of corn. But in the centre of the valley, about half way between the two ridges, and situated considerably to the right of the English centre, was the Château de Goumont, or Hougomont. This was a gentleman's house of the old Flemish architecture, having a tower and battlements. It was surrounded on one side by a large farm yard, and on the other opening to a garden and orchard, and faced by a brick wall: the whole encircled by a grove of tall trees. This château, with the advantages afforded by its wood and orchard, formed a strong point d'appui to the British right wing. The château was occupied by a detachment of the guards under Lord Saltoun. The French army was full two miles in length, extending along the opposite ridge, and having La Belle Alliance in the centre of their line. Napoleon at this time had about 100,000 men with him; the allies about 70,000, exclusive of the Prussians. Here took place, on the 18th of June, the sanguinary battle by which the fate of Europe was decided. It began at eleven o'clock in the morning and continued till seven in the evening. The boldness and exasperation exhibited by the French troops in their repeated attacks have few parallels in history; whilst the English received each successive shock with the coolest and most determined intrepidity. The French army was preparing to make a last assault, when the Prussian general, Bulow, appeared on their flanks, at the head of two divisions. A frightful panic then spread through the French ranks, and Bonaparte, abandoned by fortune, whose idol he had so often seemed, was hurried from the field by the impetuous torrent of fugitives. All the French artillery, a great part of the baggage, and even the private carriage of Napoleon, fell into the hands of the victors. This victory, however, was dearly purchased. The loss to the victors was great indeed. Beside the Generals Picton and Ponsonby, the loss of the British and Hanoverians on the 16th and 18th, amounted to not less than 13,000 men and 750 officers, the flower of the army, of whom more than two-thirds fell at Waterloo; the total loss of the Prussians, from the commencement of the campaign, to their second triumphant entry into Paris, has been officially stated at 38,000; but that of the French almost exceed belief. They began the day between 155,000 to 160,000 strong; and from their own account the wreck of the army when it was collected together did not amount to 60,000 men. Who can think of this work of human destruction without a thrill of horror at the dreadful havoc of modern warfare, or what man would hesitate to adopt the christian principles of peace and good will, with the view of averting such inhuman conflicts as these scenes have witnessed, or of which these plains were the theatre. From that moment the village of Waterloo became an object of interesting curiosity to travellers of all nations, but above all to the English, who contemplate, with a melancholy pride, fields which have been moistened with the life-springs of so many of their fellow countrymen.

Having briefly traced the momentous events that will long continue to impart a powerful interest to the plains of Waterloo, we proceed to point out such particular land-marks as may serve to give the tourist a correct idea of the positions taken by the contending armies during the contest, and, with the assistance of a few details, enable him to ascertain the precise spot of many heroic deeds. For this purpose, it is necessary to retrace our steps, in order to commence with the Forest of Soignes. The forest presents itself at a mile and three-quarters from the village, and after displaying all the majestic grandeur of sylvan scenery, disappears a little beyond Waterloo. The principal road through the wood to this village is of great length and extreme regularity; but the unvarying, uniform appearance of the trees which fringe it, give a sombre aspect to the route. The forest, which is about seven miles and a half in breadth, and nine miles in length, contains many defiles, and is interspersed with lakes, vales, brooks, hamlets, and cultivated plains. Great quantities of oak were felled by command of Bonaparte, in order to supply the dock-yards at Amsterdam; but the forest still abounds in fine timber, and a thousand acres of it, which belong to the Duke of Wellington, are said to yield a revenue of forty francs an acre. The proximity of this immense mass of wood to Brussels, renders the city somewhat damp and cold when the wind blows from that quarter; on the other hand, from its great attractive powers, thunder-clouds frequently discharge themselves there, which might otherwise carry heavy storms into the town. Nearly at the extremity of the forest, and about ten miles from Brussels stands Waterloo, as before-mentioned.

MOUNT ST. JEAN.—This hamlet, which, as before-mentioned, is more than a mile from Waterloo, at a place where the road divides into two branches, of which that on the left leads to Genappe, and that on the right to Nivelles, must not be confounded by the tourist with the farm-house of Mount St. Jean, half a mile in advance of the village, on the road to the farm of La Haye Sainte, which was in the immediate rear of the British position. From this farm an easy ascent leads to the ridge which formed the line of occupation of the British army. Near the centre of this ridge stood the Wellington tree, so called in consequence of the duke having taken his station there during a great part of the 18th. This tree was cut down and sold in 1821. In front is a little valley, irregularly formed, with numerous gentle windings and hollows, and varying in breadth from a quarter to half a mile. This was the scene of the murderous conflict. The opposite ridges, running parallel to Mount St. Jean, were occupied by the French. A stupendous triumphal mound of a conical shape, surmounted by a colossal Belgic lion in bronze, was constructed at the expense of the Netherlands government on the plains of St. Jean. The base of the monument is a hundred and sixty yards in diameter, and the height of the whole nearly fifty yards.

La Haye Sainte.—This is the name of a large farm-house on the road from Mount St. Jean to La Belle Alliance, and about a mile from the former place, on the Genappe road. It was in the left centre of the British position, and a little in advance of Wellington's tree. In the immediate vicinity of this house, which received much injury in all directions, and especially in what forms the back part of the building, a dreadful carnage took place between the combatants. It was taken by the French army on the day, and maintained by them until nearly the end of the battle. On the side of the building towards the road a monument has been erected to the memory of some officers of the 2nd German Legion, who fell in the onslaught; and at a little distance, on the opposite side of the road, is a hollow way, where 4,000 men and a great number of horses were buried in one common grave. Near this spot fell Sir Thomas Picton, leading a gallant charge on the French cuirassiers.

Hougoumont.—The large farm-house or château so called was fiercely contested. It is situated on the right of La Haye Sainte from Waterloo, at the distance of about a mile from the former place. The British had possession of the house and gardens, and fought with a desperate courage to maintain it; while the French, led on by Jerome Bonaparte, who, though wounded in the arm, still kept the field, made equal efforts to expel them, aware that, if they became masters of the place, the whole of the British lines would be exposed to their fire. It was, in fact, the key-stone of the British position. The garden was protected on three sides by a strong wall, which served our troops as a breast-work, and from behind which they aimed at the assailants with deadly certainty; the unprotected part commanded a view of Lord Wellington's position on the heights. In vain the enemy made repeated attempts to scale the garden wall from the adjoining orchard, and though they thrice entered the gates of Hougoumont, they were as often repulsed, and driven out with severe loss. At length, after a destructive fire of artillery, and the most frightful carnage, the French succeeded in setting the place on fire, and great numbers of killed and wounded on both sides were buried in the ruins. The place was entirely destroyed, with the exception of the chapel and an out-house, which escaped almost uninjured. Many of the surrounding trees were severed in two, while others were completely perforated with balls. A large but rudely-carved figure of the Saviour is placed over the altar in the chapel, which is very small, and by no means curious.

La Belle Alliance.—A small farm-house, so called, and serving as an inn of the humblest kind, is situated about three-quarters of a mile from La Haye Sainte, on the road to Genappe. It was here that the Duke of Wellington and Prince Blücher met on the evening of the day of battle. Having embraced in the most affectionate manner, the duke retired on his position, and Blücher went in pursuit of the flying enemy. Bonaparte posted his favourite guard in front of this place, and never approached in person nearer to La Haye Sainte than the hollow part of the ground between that place and La Belle Alliance and the main road. The Prussians have erected a monument in iron near this spot to commemorate the success of their army.

MARLE BRAINE.—This small place is on the right of the village of Mount St. Jean, and about a mile from it. The British reserve on the right, commanded by Major-General Humber, was posted on this part of the field; but no event occurred to render the spot memorable.

The ground where the battle was fought produced the best crops in Belgium for many years after the sanguinary event. Over the spot where lay mouldering in ashes the broken fragments of humanity, sacrificed at the shrine of cruel, remorseless war, the green corn of spring waved luxuriantly, and in summer time shot forth its golden ear full of grain, nurtured by the dust of friend and foe, who, but for the fury of war, might have slept peaceably in consecrated earth, beneath the green sward of the village churchyard, and appeared before the God of Peace, undefiled with blood.

"But where I stood, beneath the fresh green tree,
Which, living, waves where thou didst cease to live,
And saw around me the wide fields revive
With fruits and fertile promises, and the spring
Came forth her work of gladness to contrive,
With all her reckless birds upon the wing,
I turned from all she brought to those she could not bring."
BYRON.

"Was it a soothing or a mournful thought,
Amid this scene of slaughter, as we stood,
Where armies had with recent fury fought,
To mark how gentle nature still pursued
Her quiet course, as if she took no care
For what her noblest work had suffered there."
SOUTHEY.

Visitors to Waterloo will find hordes of beggars, and fellows selling reliques, in the shape of buttons, shreds of cloth, fragments of accoutre- ments, bullets. Very many melancholy memorials of the carnage were brought to light for some years after the battle.

There are several other pretty places to which excursions could be made with pleasure from Brussels, such as Forest, Trois Fontaines, Terveuren, and

ROUTE 7.

Waterloo to Namur.

SAVENTHEM, 12 miles from Brussels, a commune of the district of Brussels, with 1,200 inhabitants. The church will well repay a visit to the amateur of painting, who will see there a magnificent picture by Van Dyck, representing St. Martin on his horse, giving a portion of his cloak to a poor man. The history of this painting is interesting, and deserves relating.

Van Dyck, on his way to bid farewell to his illustrious master, previous to his departure for Rome, was mounted on a superb horse, a gift from Rubens, and passed by Saventhem. It was a holiday, and the people were dancing under the trees. Van Dyck delayed, and danced with the most beautiful girl in the village, and before the ball was over, found himself deeply in love with her. He was then twenty-four years of age. Rome was forgotten. Days, weeks, and months rolled by; his money was all gone. Van Dyck's passion being now calmed, and his resources exhausted, he found that his interests and fame called him to Rome; but what was he to do, not having a florin to bring him there? Happily his courage sustained him. He presented himself to the curé, and proposed to paint an altar piece for his church. The subject was agreed on, and the price fixed at 100 florins. The painting was finished in five days. Van Dyck himself and his horse served as models for the horse and saint, and the beads of the church for the poor man. The curé was, by chance, a judge of painting; he paid the demand without murmuring, and Van Dyck set out for Rome. This circumstance provided the poor village church with a chef-d'œuvre.

Brussels to Paris.—By Charleroi, Equeulennes, and Creil. Great Luxembourg Station, Quartier Leopold.

Distance, 215 miles. Fares, 36fr. 10c. 1st class 27fr. 30c. 2nd class.

This route is considerably shorter than that

Page 40.

Monuments at Waterloo.

Page 46.

Hôtel de Ville, Mons.

Page 48.

Château of Namur.

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

STÜBLINGHUTPILZ von BELLE ALLIANCE.

him. Before entering the town, the commune of Nimy and the river Haine are passed; running parallel to one another, the railroad and river pass through a bastion, and enter the town together. The Station is situated within the arsenal.

Mons (Hotel: de la Couronne, the best), thirty-eight miles from Brussels, is a large and fortified town, the chief town of the province of Hainault. Population, 31,000. The river Trouille divides it into two parts, and is partly overlooked by the mound of the Panina. It is said that Julius Cæsar built a cast. here, which, taking the name of Castrum Cæsaris, formed the beginning of the town of Mons—destroyed by the barbarians in the fifth century. Alberic, Count of Hainault, repaired the remains of the town, and surrounded it with walls. In 804, Charles-magne formed it into the capital of a province. Mons after this became the scene of many troubles. Under the reign of Charles V. it had its greatest degree of prosperity; the manufactures of cloth and serge were carried on to a great extent. Iron was wrought here to great advantage, and the beauty of the chasing in their jewellery excited the admiration of strangers. Under the French Republic, Mons became the department of Jemmapes. The fortifications, rebuilt in 1815 upon a new plan, are preserved with much care. The streets are steep, but wide, clean, and in good repair. The monuments and curiosities are numerous, and worthy of attention.

Mons was the natal town of Orlando Lassus, the celebrated musician of the sixteenth century. Ten miles south of Mons, within the French territories, is the spot where was fought the sanguinary battle of Malplaquet, at which the Duke of Marlborough and Prince Eugene conquered the French, and lost on the battle field 20,000 men.

Mons has a communication with the Scheldt by the Canal de Condé; and also, by railway, with Jurbise, Ath, Tournai, Lille, and Calais.

Mons also possesses manufactures of gloves, leather, and cutlery, and several tan-yards and bleaching grounds. The principal buildings are the Castle, the Hôtel de Ville, and the Church of St. Waudru, which is said to be built on the site of Cæsar's Castle. The altar deserves attention. There is also a Theatre, a Public Library, a College, and a Foundling Hospital. Mons was the birth-place of Peter Denys, a Journeyman blacksmith, who constructed the beautiful iron ornaments which decorate the Abbey of St. Denis, near Paris.

Church of St. Waudru—Is said to be the finest in Belgium. It was founded in 1460, on the site of another church burnt in 1169. More than a century elapsed ere the works were finished. The nave is a masterpiece of boldness, elegance, and lightness; the numerous columns which adorn it and form innumerable Gothic arches at the top, compose a most delightful whole. Space will not permit us to enter further into detail in connection with the many curiosities of this church, save in allowing us to notice the splendid picture of the Exaltation of St. Francis, by Van Thulden; a Descent from the Cross, by Tondt; a Gothic altar, finely sculptured; the beautiful stained glass in the windows; and last, though not least, the fine statues, formerly adorning the screen, but happily preserved.

St. Elizabeth.—This church is remarkable for its light and graceful spire.

St. Nicholas, in Havre, is noted for the severe and imposing aspect of the interior. It possesses some fine carving in wood. From the tower of the belfry a magnificent view of the surrounding country is obtained.

The Public Library is open every day: it contains 13,000 volumes, and about 300 manuscripts.

Hôtel de Ville is a Gothic edifice, erected in the year 1440. It contains nothing remarkable, but is the chief ornament of the Grand Square.

The Palais de Justice and Museum will well repay a visit.

At Mons a branch railway ensures a direct communication from Paris to Charleroi, Namur, and Cologne. This route avoids the detour to Braine-le-Comte. On leaving Mons, the railway crosses the river Trouille, and passes not very far from the Canal de Condé and the Stuices of St. Ghislain; after which it reaches Jemmapes Station.

MONS TO QUIEVRAIN.—After leaving the fortification the railroad inclines at first towards the right, traversing an extensive plain, bounded on the left by the Panisel and the little hills of Flénu and crowned by the high chimneys of numerous coal works. The canal from Mons to Condi, which, in a distance of five leagues, runs in a perfectly straight line, is seen on the left, as also the village of Cuesme, the theatre of one of the most sanguinary episodes of the celebrated battle of Jemmapes. Passing the levant of Flenn, the station of

View of Liège,

Page 46. Interior of St. Waudrau, Mons.

Aisle of l'Eglise de Sixmonde.

JEMMAPES is reached. A small village remarkable for the victory gained by the French under General Dumourier, and the late Louis Philippe, when Duke de Chartres, over the Austrians. A stone close to the post road marks the scene of the battle. Outside the town are immense heaps of coal these are the accumulations of a busy time, brought to supply an apparent demand, which, however, did not last long. The village of Quaregnon is passed after leaving Jemmapes, near to which are seen the ruins of the ancient tower, known by the name of the High Court. The railroad here takes a considerable bend, and shortly after runs into the straight line, which continues to the frontier. The country on each side is in high cultivation, and adorned with many beautiful country houses. The station of ST. GHISLAIN is next reached, the church of which is on the right. On the left are the magnificent establishments of Hornu, established by the late Mad. Degorgies Legrand. St. Ghislain is a very ancient town; population, 3,600. The surrounding country very much resembles the neighbourhood of Manchester and Bolton.

BOUSSU is the next station; it is the chief place of a canton; population, 3,500. The château of the Count de Caraman, at present the property of the Count de Nedonchelles, is here situated. This architectural wonder should be seen by the tourist; there are many remarkable traditions connected with it. The station has been erected in a part of the magnificent park, from which it is separated by a splendid iron railing. The church of Boussu contains some fine pieces of sculpture. Between Boussu and Thulin the next station, there is nothing worthy of notice. Quievrain is arrived at shortly after leaving Thulin; it is the last station of the Belgian railway. The office of the Belgian Custom House is here, and the passports and baggage of parties entering Belgium are examined.

QUIEVRAIN (the station of the Belgian Custom House).—A town containing 2,000 inhabitants, carrying on an active commerce with France. It does not absolutely contain anything worth notice. This is the frontier station of the Southern Line, and the point of junction with the Great Northern of France Railway.

QUIEVRAIN to VALENCIENNES.—

BLANC MINSERON is next met with, after which we enter

VALENCIENNES.—Route 1, page 4.

Valenciennes to Paris by rail. The delay during the examination of luggage, which takes place at Valenciennes, is considerable.

ROUTE 8.

Brussels to Charleroi and Namur. 68½ English miles. (BRUSSELS to BRAINE-LE COMTE, see Route 1.—At Braine-le-Comte the line to Namur branches off east from that of Mons. Travellers proceeding to Namur change carriages here.

Leaving the Mons Railway on the right, the station of Ecausines is shortly arrived at; it is renowned for its valuable quarries of blue lime stone. After leaving the station a fine viaduct of nine arches is passed. The church of the village of Marché-les-Ecausines contains some exceedingly curious tombs. Passing through a country possessing no remarkable features, the station of Manage is next reached. The junction of Mons and Manage lines takes place here. On the left lies Seneffe, remarkable as the spot where William III., Prince of Orange, in 1674, fought the old warrior, Condé, on which occasion 27,000 were killed. There is at the latter place a magnificent château, enclosed by a remarkable park. Leaving Manage the scenery becomes more varied: interesting works of art are numerous. Traversing the tunnel of Godarville, the railroad takes a course, the windings and turnings of which it is impossible to describe—now turning to the left, now to the right—now passing hills, now opening a passage through them. After passing the stations of Guty-les-Piéton and Pont-à-Celles, the road next traverses a cutting, the sides of which exhibit layers of earth and flint strangely superposed. On approaching Gosselies the landscape becomes more interesting and varied, the cuttings are of immense depth; as the slope lowers, the country houses seen on either side are numerous and elegant. The station of Gosselies is at the distance of a mile and a half from the town, to which an omnibus conveys the traveller. The town presents nothing worthy of notice, population

3,000. On quitting Gosselies, the railroad traverses a rich and beautiful country, cutting through several beds of coal, and passing Sumetz, situated in a most picturesque manner at the base of a little hill; the Abbey of Sart-le-Moine is here situated. It contains a rich altar-piece of wood sculpture. Passing the village of Roux, at which there is a station, the road traverses a rich open country, in the midst of which are the manufacturing districts of Charleroi, and shortly reaches the station of Marchiennes-au-Pont, the junction with the Sambre and Meuse Railway, 25 miles of which are now open. Other branches will be opened on the 1st of July, 1853, and the main line is to be completed on 1st May, 1854 (see Introduction, p. xv). Here the Brussels and Charleroi canals join the Meuse. The river Sambre is here met with, and between this station and Namur the railroad crosses it no less than sixteen times. The railroad here crosses it on a beautiful bridge. On the right, after leaving Marchiennes, the gigantic establishments of Moncean Fontaine are seen; at the distance of a league and a half from these, the ruins of the Abbey of Aline are situated—the traveller should visit these. Crossing the river Heure, which effects its confluence immediately after with the Sambre, the coal works of Lodelmaart are passed on the left, and the town of La Providence,—here the manufacture of iron is carried on to a large extent. The stranger should not think of quitting the neighbourhood without visiting some of these Cyclopean caves, which cast into shade the Vulcanian smiths of Etna, and all the mythological fictions of the ancients. Approaching Charleroi, the fortifications of which are seen through the trees by which they are shaded, the station situated in the lower town and near the place is arrived at.

Charleroi.—Inn:

Hôtel Pays Bas, the best

Has not more than 5,000 inhabitants, and is of little consequence, the fortifications having prevented its becoming what it otherwise would have been—one of the most flourishing towns on the Continent; it has a population of 84,500, and presents a scene of extraordinary activity. The Charleroi coal-field is the most extensive in Belgium, giving employment to 14,000 miners, and yielding annually 3,000,000 tons of coal; the glass trade is also carried on to a very great extent, and those numerous and extensive iron works, which derive their supplies of iron ore from the Sambre and Meuse district—one of the most picturesque and interesting countries in Belgium, but, with the exception of a few eminent geologists, totally unknown to travellers. It extends about forty miles south of Charleroi to the French Ardennes. The Sambre and Meuse Railway, which commences at Marchiennes-au-Pont, about a mile from Charleroi, will shortly traverse it in its entire length, terminating on the Meuse, near Givet.

THE SAMBRE AND MEUSE RAILWAY BRANCHES.

The Sambre and Meuse present attractive features to the lovers of angling, the trout of the former and craw-fish of the latter being abundant and excellent. Bridges span both the rivers here.

At two leagues' distance from Charleroi, in the picturesque valley of the Sambre, are the ruins of the Abbaye d'Aline, the most ancient monastery perhaps in Europe, built in the year 656.

The railway crosses the river Sambre many times between Charleroi and Namur. The scenery is most charming. At Charleroi the line branches off, and leads to Walcourt, and having offshoots to Lanefé, Morialmé, and Florenne.

Shortly after leaving the station, the village of Couillet, renowned for its metallurgic establishments, is passed; then Montigny-sur-Sambre, the factories of which give employment to many workmen. Crossing the Sambre, the elevated chimneys of Chatelineau are observable, at the station of which town the traveller shortly arrives. The town is celebrated for its earthenware, which is in high estimation. Leaving Chatelineau the traveller passes the beautiful château of Beaulieu, the gardens of which are much spoiled by the railway, and shortly arrives at the station of Farciennes, which has been literally cut in two by the railway passing through it. Farciennes is a pretty village of 1,500 inhabitants. Passing through a country rich, varied, and interesting, the station of Taminies is next arrived at, a village of little importance,—then that of Auvélais, a pretty village, possessing nothing to interest the tourist. Crossing the Sambre for the seventh time since leaving Marchiennes, immediately after leaving Auvélais, the railroad enters vast cuttings, made in enormous banks of schistus, curiously disposed. Passing

Page 57.

Palais du Roi, Laeken.

Page 49.

Cathedral of Namur.

View of Huy

1

2

3

4

5

6

7

8

9

10

11

12

13

14

15

16

Neuvill

Neuvill

Neuvill

Amp

—

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

—

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

•

the hamlet of Grand Bois, and again crossing the Sambre, deep cuttings are entered, on emerging from which are seen richly clad meadows, through which meanders the Sambre. On the right is seen the steeple of the church of Ham-sur-Sambre, and on the left that of Lemmepe. The next station of Moustier is then seen, and further on to the left Mornsmert; then a cutting, then again the Sambre, and always the Sambre, which recedes, approaching and undulating like a serpent, unfolds amorously the green hills, then retires, coquette as she is, to wander about in a thousand circuits, where the eye in vain strives to follow her.

The railroad next passes through a lovely wood, surrounded by forests; on the right, as far as the eye can reach, rise a succession of hills, entirely wooded, which lower insensibly, and terminate in front of us by a slight elevation, in which is situated the village of Francères; on the left are the park and château of Loye, and looking across the viaduct the traveller may perceive the magnificent buildings of the Abbey of Floreffe, situated midway on the side of a hill higher than all those we have hitherto seen, and bristled here and there with the points of rocks, which cut off by their acidity the vigorous vegetation which surrounds them on all sides.

FLOREFFE station gives evidence, in the immense church and the beauty of its abbey, of the importance anciently attached to it by the Counts of Namur. It has 1,600 inhabitants. Crossing the Sambre three times after leaving Floreffe, the railroad passes Malenne, a celebrated abbey, the beautiful steeple of which, erected in 1651, is seen between two hills towards the right. Passing through a country somewhat varied and interesting, the Sambre, in following the course of the railroad describes innumerable curves and turnings, and crossing a fine viaduct, reaches the station in Namur, situated outside the Porte-de-Fer, which leads to Louvain.

Namur.—Hotels:

Hôtel d'Harscamp, highly recommended.

Hôtel Belle Vne.

The capital of the province of Namur, at the conflux of the Sambre and the Meuse, a well-built city, with wide and clean streets. It contains a population of 22,300, who are chiefly employed in the cutlery business. It is defended by a citadel, built on the summit of a craggy rock. Here are extensive manufactures of fire-arms, swords, knives, scissars, and other articles of iron, copper, and brass. Quantities of leather, paper, thread, and tobacco are also prepared here. Namur has often changed masters, and is noted for the many sieges which it has sustained. It is the strongest fortress in Belgium. Namur, owing to the destruction inflicted on its monuments and structures during its numerous sieges, bombardments, &c., has now but few objects of interest to enlist the traveller's notice. Among the few still remaining is the Cathedral of St. Aubin, an elegant modern building, in the Corinthian order, having a portico supported by twenty-five columns (the capitals of which are elaborately ornamented), and surmounted by statues in white marble. In the interior will be observed some fine paintings by Rubens, and some remarkable monuments. On the right of the altar is a monument to the Bishop Pisani. Here also is the mausoleum of Don John of Austria, the victor of Lepanto. The pulpit erected in 1848, from a plan by M. Geerts, deserves notice. The figures sculptured on it are very fine.

The Church of St. Loup, or the Jesuit's Church is also a fine specimen of the ornamental style of architecture. The roof is constructed of the stone of St. Hubert, brought from the Ardennes, in the neighbourhood of Marche; and the wood of the confessionals is curiously and elaborately carved.

The Château, remarkable for its siege of two years, from 1256 to 1258. The Government House was formerly the Bishop's Palace, built in 1725, by an Englishman named Strickland, who was bishop of the diocese. The Citadel and Ramparts, built on one of the mountains overhanging the town, command varied and extensive views over the fertile country watered by the Meuse. The town also contains several hospitals (the principal of which is that founded by the Countess of Harschamp, in 1812, for aged destitute persons of both sexes) a Public Library, an Athenæum, and a Theatre. In the neighbourhood of the town are immense quarries of free and lime stone, and also of black red, and grey marble, susceptible of a very high polish.

In addition to working these quarries the inhabitants of Namur are employed in the manufacture of cutlery, fire-arms, paper, glue, nails hats, fies, lace, serge, woollen stuffs, crockery-ware, and all articles of iron, copper, bronze, steel, and tin.

The tan-yards, which were formerly an important branch of industry at Namur, are much diminished in importance; but there are still several remaining—as also numerous breweries, and one glass house. The pit-coal called honille is found in the mountain on which the castle is built. Tobacco and endive are cultivated in the neighbourhood of the town.

The streets of Namur are wide and well built, principally of blue stone, veined with red and black. The river abounds in excellent fish, particularly craw-fish, which are exported to every part of the kingdom. The singular sham-fights, formerly carried on between the two parties of young townsmen, mounted on stilts, were once a favourite diversion of the inhabitants, and to which, it is said, the brewers of Namur owe the exemption from excise, granted by Duke Albert. They are now almost discontinued, but are still occasionally to be seen during the fairs, the principal of which commences on the 2nd July, and lasts fifteen days; the others are but one day each, viz., the second Monday in April, the second Saturday in July, and the first Saturday in October. Within three miles of Namur is the curious Hermitage of Montagne, cut in the solid rock, by a brotherhood of Carmelite Friars; and about two miles to the north, in the arrondissement of Philippeville, is the village of Vedrin, in which is a valuable lead mine, discovered in 1619. It is now worked by a powerful steam engine. This neighbourhood also affords a white sand, used in making glass. The walk to this village, as well as that to La Plante, which is about the same distance, is delightfully picturesque.

ROUTE 9.

Namur to Liège.—NAMUR (see Route 8).

The railway station is situated near the burying-ground between the exterior fortifications and the hill of Pied-noir, in the space which extends from the Brussels gate to the Iron gate, formerly Sampuris gate, one of the few remains of the last wall built round the town in the beginning of the fifteenth century.

Leaving the station the railway passes under the hill of Pied-noir, and that of Coquelet, between which ascends the high road leading to Louvain.

After the double of the hill of Pied-noir, more generally known by the name of the Windmill-mount, the railway, leaving to the right the fortifications of the town, St. Nicholas's gate, and the neighbouring plantations, passes by the trees of the Grands-Malades (an old leper hospital), at the foot of steep hills of which the rocky slopes conceal from sight the village of Bouges, by which they are crowned. At this point we see embedded in a rock the picturesque hermitage of St. Hubert. The railway now approaches the Meuse, and does not leave it until its arrival at Liège. It crosses the first valley running past some rocks of dazzling reflection, which close the prospect on the left bank, and vanish towards a cluster of trees which shelter the white buildings at the sign of the La Tête du-pré. The landscape is closed on the right bank, which the old road follows, by the heights of Erpent, at the top of which winds the road to Luxembourg; lower down, by the hill overhanging the gloomy Trou des Larrons, a famous cave, once so dreaded by travellers; and lastly, by the heights of Lives, the sides of which are covered with blocks of stone, presenting the fantastic appearance of an old manor house, with its massive entrance flanked by two mouldering towers.

This first valley has beauties too numerous for us to attempt to describe. It is followed by others in rapid succession, equally grand and beautiful. Every attempt to do so would appear cold and colourless compared with the impression produced by the view, under the unceasing play of light and shade, by the splendid river, sprinkled here and there with verdant and graceful islands, a limpid and azure path travelled over, hour after hour, by heavily laden trading boats, slender steamers, with sounding and foaming paddles, and long white plumes of smoke.

Beyond Tete-du-Pré the railway passes by the village of Beez, and soon reaches the beautiful rocks of Marche les Dames, whose greyish sides border the road, and proudly raise their wild steep crags in the air.

MARCHE LES DAMES STATION.—The castle on the road side is an erection of the present century, by the owner of some ironworks, it now belongs to the Prince Arenberg. The village is of regular construction, and contains a pretty good number of houses and forges.

Page 51.

Nameche.

re 51.

Rocks of Sampson.

Page 51.

Saigneaux.

Page 51.

Page

Castle of. Seilles

1. The first part of the document is a letter from the President of the United States to the Congress, dated January 3, 1862. It is a very important document, as it contains the President's annual message to Congress. The letter is written in a very formal and dignified style, and it is one of the most important documents in the history of the United States.

2. The second part of the document is a report from the Secretary of the Interior, dated January 3, 1862. It is a very important document, as it contains the Secretary's annual report to the President. The report is written in a very formal and dignified style, and it is one of the most important documents in the history of the United States.

3. The third part of the document is a report from the Secretary of the Treasury, dated January 3, 1862. It is a very important document, as it contains the Secretary's annual report to the President. The report is written in a very formal and dignified style, and it is one of the most important documents in the history of the United States.

4. The fourth part of the document is a report from the Secretary of the War, dated January 3, 1862. It is a very important document, as it contains the Secretary's annual report to the President. The report is written in a very formal and dignified style, and it is one of the most important documents in the history of the United States.

5. The fifth part of the document is a report from the Secretary of the Navy, dated January 3, 1862. It is a very important document, as it contains the Secretary's annual report to the President. The report is written in a very formal and dignified style, and it is one of the most important documents in the history of the United States.

The village owes the first part of its name to its situation on the confines of the ancient district of Namur (March, frontier limit), and the latter part, refer to the foundation of the Abbey, which still attracts a number of visitors to Marche-les-Dames. An affecting tradition connects its origin with the first crusade. When in the reign of Albert III. the Namur crusaders set out for the Holy Land, such of their wives as were unable to follow them, assembled in the rustic and lonely valley, of which the industry now established there has not entirely destroyed the charms; they raised a modest chapel, in which, praying for the deliverance of the Holy Sepulchre, they waited for the return of their husbands. But out of the many warriors who had been to seek for glory on the burning plains of Palestine, very few, indeed, ever regained the green hills of their native land. When the crusaders who had escaped death returned to the banks of the Meuse, desolation reigned in the Valley of Notre Dame due Vivier, as it was then called. Most of those wives learned that they were widows, and resolved to end their days in the retreat which they had chosen, and young girls, whom the war had made fatherless, joined them. An abbey was founded there, which, in three centuries afterwards, adopted the rule of St. Bernard.

Opposite here, on the right bank of the river, is the château of Brumagne, in a shady park; and on the left bank, at a small distance, is the furnace of Hainin. A little further on, as we enter the village of Namêche, against the extreme point of a rocky chasm, we see a modern little chapel, almost buried behind the embankment of the railway. It is dedicated to St. Roch, and has, above its door, the following chonography:—

"SANT ROCH VOUS AVEZ SLOIGNE LES MAUX DE CETTE PAROISSE."

This church was erected at the cessation of the cholera in 1833, which ravaged Namêche with great violence.

Above Namêche, on the opposite bank, on the slope of a high hill, and from the midst of a dark plantation of fir trees, appears, with its whitish walls and vast slate roof, the lordly residence of Moisanl. Lower down, and occupying the bottom of the valley, appear the gigantic rocks of Sampson, opposing a seemingly irresistible barrier to the river; on the highest block are the ruins of the castle of Sampson.

NAMECHE STATION.—Beyond Namêche, a short distance from the village, the extreme point of an elevation which skirts the railway presents the exact image of a grotesque human figure. The artist, in drawing it, has not made the least alteration, nor the slightest addition. He has merely copied the fantastic profile which offered itself to his view, and which vanished from his sight, when he only met with a capricious assemblage of shapeless stones which the railway cuttings have exposed to view.

SCLAIGNEAUX Station is a small village depending on the village of Vézin. Amidst the buildings, whose redish walls contrast with the grey tints the of overhanging rocks, appears a lead manufactory. The village on the opposite bank, that reflects itself on the waters of the Meuse, is no other than Solayn, situated in the centre of a basin, whose collective prospect presents one of the most agreeable sights on the line between Namur and Huy.

The railway, after being for a pretty considerable time conured between rocks and the river, crosses a first tunnel, two hundred and thirty-five metres long, pierced through the rock, and leading at once to the beautiful and extensive basin of Andennes. In the first place, on the right of the railway, a charming castle, in the style of the fifteenth century, reflects forth on the blue arch of heaven the elegant architecture of its battlements and turrets. It is the castle of Seilles, and, though lately erected, it appears as if the barons of the country had held their court for ages within its feudal precincts. The Roman tower, which appears on the left, belongs to the church of Seilles. In the private chapel of the ancient Lords is a tomb, a real work of art, sacred to Michael de Warisoulx and his wife Jeanne de Crehen.

ANDENNES STATION.—An important town on the right bank of the river. A bridge is now constructing for uniting the two banks, and ensuring to the town all the advantages which the railway affords. The population is 8,000, of which a large number is employed in the paper mills, pottery works, and iron mines, which the town and its vicinity possess. Andennes is indebted to the celebrated Cockerill for the establishment of a vast paper manufactory, which is now no longer the only one there that affords a profitable employment to a considerable number of workmen. Between Andennes and Bas-Oha the railway, passing through the province of Liège, crosses the village of Java, renowned for its orchards and vineyards, which are the most productive in the country.

On the right bank, the hills, which had receded as if to allow the villages of Givès and Ben to extend in the plain, again draw nearer to the river, and on the airy top of the rocks are seen the imposing ruins of the castle of Beaufort.

On the left bank, near Huy, the church, built on the hill, the slope of which stops the railway, is that of Statte, one of the seven suburbs of the town. Just before crossing the Méhaigne which served as a line of defence at the close of the 17th century against the armies sent to raise the siege of Namur, and before entering the tunnel, which ends at the station of Huy—quite at the end of the charming landscape, formed by the Meuse and the hills, partly green and partly barren, which enclose and command it—one discovers the vast bastions of the citadel, suspended like an eagle's nest on the brow of a rock.

Huy Station, half way between Namur and Liège, has, from its situation as well as its importance, been selected for the central station of this line. Nothing can be more striking than the prospect which rises, as it were, to the view, when, after the subterranean darkness of the long tunnel of Statte, one finds one's-self suddenly under the blue vault, reflected by the Meuse, between the steep heights of the left bank, all covered with vineyards, and the woody hills on the right bank, under the shelter of which the town lies, and over which peer, amidst the houses which they command, the lofty rock, crowned by the citadel, the Gothic Collegiate Church, under the invocation of Notre Dame, and the tapering spire of its church, dedicated to St. Peter.

Huy is divided by the Meuse into two parts, one on the right bank, in Condroz, the other in Hesbaye. The town is so confined between the hills that overhang it, that the streets appear crushed by them. Under the government of the Prince Bishop of Liège it contained only 5,000 inhabitants, but could boast of 15 churches and a considerable number of abbeys and convents. The ruins of the greatest part of the religious buildings, a few monuments entirely preserved, and a quantity of curious constructions of a more or less distant epoch, will long afford a plentiful supply of interesting studies to the researchers of the antiquarian and the pencil of the artist. If you question an inhabitant of the country on the wonders of Huy, he will at once reply in his peculiar dialect, li pontia, li rondia, li bassalia—the bridge over the Meuse, the rose of the Collegiate Church, and the fountain of the Grand Place.

The Bridge was built in 1294, and cost 6,000 livres. The arches, seven in number, are 120 metres above the level of the bed of the Meuse. The far-famed rose of the Collegiate Church adorns the interior façade of the building, the finest monument of the second pointed style in Belgium.

The Brass Basin of the fountain on the Grand Place is ornamented with curiously worked figures, presumed to be satirical allusions to certain convents in the neighbourhood.

The Citadel was built in 1817, in the place occupied by the old castle, destroyed by the Dutch in 1717. It commands at the same time the town and the courses of the Meuse and Hoyoux—the latter a small rapid river which crosses the right bank quarter of the town, and falls into the river at the very foot of the rock, crowned by the bastions of the fortress.

We should be guilty of a great oversight did we not invite the tourist to spend a few hours in rambling through the deep and narrow valley, watered by the limpid waters of the Hoyoux. Its rapid course gives impulse to a number of manufactures, whose presence adds to the picturesque-ness of the landscape. From Huy to Barse, where the valley, widening for a moment, brings to view the old manor-house, now transformed into a farm-house, to which its old turret gives a martial rather than a rural aspect; then from Barse to Modave, whose castle, blending the grey tints of its towers and walls with those of the craggy sides of the rock which support it, seems to form with it but one gigantic edifice. Huy is essentially an industrious town. By means of its port on the Meuse it carries on a considerable trade in corn, and the wine, which alone in all Belgium it produces in sufficient quantity to be worth mentioning, forms the object of a commerce which is becoming more important every day. From the station the railway, in its direction towards Liège, regains, by a considerable curve, the bank of the Meuse. Here one enjoys

Page 52

Railway Station at Huy.

Mallicue.

Page 54.

Castle of Chokier.

The Railway Crossing the Meuse.

an extensive prospect, comprising the whole town with the splendid bridge which occupies the middle of it, and the rock of Fort, which overhangs it, and whose greyish mass detaches itself on the verdant ground of the surrounding heights. The long chain which crowns the right barrier is suddenly interrupted by the steep rock that shelters the town, and in front of which the fertile basin unfolds itself, in which, in the first place, appears the pretty village of Tihange.

The railway, after coming near the old road from Namur to Liège, which from the right bank has passed to the left, runs by the blackened buildings of a zinc manufactory, which clouds of dust and smoke envelope in a constant fog. It crosses the tunnel of Loyable, cut in the rocky height, which on that side bounds the valley of Huy, and arrives in a vast basin, to which the green carpet of the meadows, the varied mosaic work of cultivated land, and the shade of the succeeding orchards and tufts of trees, give a most rural aspect. The village of Ampsin, seen on the left, with its church, the steeple of which shews on the greyish ground of a calcareous rock, is crossed by the stream of Bende. At the right of the railway, on the banks of the Meuse, rises the Castle of Ampsin, consisting of three buildings, the most extensive of which is flanked by a square tower, surmounted by a Belvedere. It is built in the water, and is entirely isolated, and communicates with the inner court by a large bridge. Opposite the Castle of Ampsin is the Castle of Neuville, a superb construction in the modern style, consisting of a double building with two wings, terminated by two pavilions, the dome-shaped roof of which is surmounted by two lanterns. The banks of the river are embellished by the gardens of both residences.

AMAY Station is a league beyond Ampsin, and is the first intermediate station between Huy and Liège. The station, built along a park, enclosing a handsome country-house, presents the most delightful aspect. The village lies at the foot of the hills which tend to draw near the Meuse. The Gothic collegiate, with its three aisles, presents a considerable building to the view. Beyond the collegiate a steep rock serves as a pedestal, as it were, to a small church dedicated to St. Catherine, but commonly known by the name of St. Pompey. At the loftiest top of the neighbouring heights, and near some larch trees, whose dark branches appear like black lace on the azure of the sky, a windmill merrily turns its sails, exposed to all the winds of heaven. It is the only windmill to be seen on the line, and looks like a forlorn sentry of ancient industry, in the confines of a valley where modern industry rules with absolute sway. An excellent kind of plum is produced there, which, when dried, is supplied to trade. The vine is cultivated with success: the Amay wine is the best in the country.

A short distance beyond Amay the railway, leaving the basin where it deviated from the Meuse, again approaches the river, going the old highway, which is crossed near Ampsin, and which it meets once more to the left of the narrow bank, bordered by a long chain of formidable rocks of various tints. It next crosses the village of Flône, at the extremity of which appears the celebrated abbey, the site of which is undoubtedly one of the most remarkable in the journey.

On the right bank between the river and the hills, undulating on the horizon, one perceives the village of Ombret, then the castle and burgh of Hermalle, of which the triple central building, with the two towers over the eastern façade, and the two square pavilions erected before the garden, forms an ensemble by no means destitute of grandeur.

The rocks by the side of the railway continue to appear as far as la Malleue, a small village, whose thatched houses, picturesquely grouped at the foot of the heights, contrast, in their rustic and ruinous aspect, with the recent constructions of the neighbouring zinc manufactory. The line next follows a huge embankment, which runs along the river nearly as far as the works of the Nouvelle Montagne. This important zinc establishment, of which the vast work-shops extend along the Meuse, faces on the opposite bank a few slate-roofed brick buildings, forming a dependency of the village of Clermont. As it draws near the Nouvelle Montagne, the railway once more crosses the old road, passing to the right of the zinc works, whilst the line itself, passing to the left, deviates from the river by a curve traced between two embankments, which are too high to allow us a sight of the village of Engis and the neighbouring plantations.

ENGIS Station presents, on the side towards the Meuse, a rather rapid slope, in a southern direction, a most favourable situation for the cultivation, tion of the vine. On the road to Warfusée is a handsome country seat, built only thirty years ago. At the foot of a chalky rock, which commands the river on the right bank, one can perceive a building, known by the name of the Château of Engihoul.

To the village of Engis succeeds the territory of the Anna. A break in the hilly chain, at whose foot are fertile valleys, by the side of which the railway passes, discloses of a sudden, at the top of a craggy rock, the ancient castle of Aigremont.

A little beyond Aigremont one can see, nearly 300 feet above the bank, the castle of Chokier, majestically built on a steep rock, resembling a reversed pyramid in shape. The principal building, reconstructed in the modern taste, stands on a very extensive terrace. The bastions in front of it, and the brick turret which peers gracefully and proudly over the vast layers of the enclosing wall, seem to be the remains of the ancient castle.

Leaving Chokier the railway goes past some dusty lime-kilns, which have given the neighbouring hamlet the name of Chaffour, close by the station of Flémalle.

From this station begins the branch line which extends on the left bank as far as the Guillemins, or Government Station, at Liège. It first crosses the village of Flémalle-Haute, and then passes over the territory of the village of Flémalle-Grande. The ground towards the north is high, and intersected by hills; towards the south is one on which the vine flourishes.

JEMMAPP Station appears a little further on, opposite the Seraing establishment, situated on the right bank. The iron bridge, 120 metres long, crosses the Meuse at one of its widest parts. Its vast horizontal floor, adorned on each side by a handsome iron railing, is suspended by four enormous chains to the top of four cast-iron cylindrical obelisks, aid upon the two anterior piles of a large stone arch, which prolongs the bridge over each arch.

From Jemmapp to Tilleur the ground is almost entirely covered with houses, amongst which are some very pretty ones.

TILLEUR Station is a village of small importance. The hills which the railway has run by since it left Flémalle seem to withdraw and disappear. In the beautiful basin through which the line extends the village of Sclessin rises. Beyond Sclessin the hills, which had drawn nearer to the river, again withdraw to form a smiling and fertile valley, which they surround as with a circle, leaving open only the side bounded by the Meuse, and where the sight freely wanders on the woody heights on the right bank. After passing through the Val-Benoit, which touches the town of Liège, the left bank branch arrives at the Guillemins where it joins the State Railway in the station common to both.

Leaving the Flémalle station, where the railway bifurcates, the trunk line crossing the old highway, which continues to follow the left bank, advances towards the Meuse, which it crosses on a stone bridge, one hundred and sixty metres long and eight and a half broad. The valley which the railway enters on reaching the right bank was formerly called the field of Moors.

The view that one discovers immediately after crossing the Meuse is the most extensive, the most varied, and the most fascinating, perhaps, in the whole trip. The landscape, which is not a little embellished by the elegantly constructed bridge, is commanded, on the right bank by the woody hill bounding the Valley St. Lambert, and at the top of which the high chimneys of the Ivrois coal works appear, rising amidst the trees on the left bank, by the steep rock surmounted by the castle of Chokier, with its heavy bastions and graceful turrets; whilst opposite appear the two châteaux of Flémalle-Haute and Flémalle-Grande, and on both sides of the river to the furthest horizon, innumerable forges usher in the wealthy basin of the Liège country, producing iron and coal in equal abundance.

Beyond the Valley St. Lambert the railway crosses the Marihay coal works, and passing by the side of the Esperance furnaces, reaches SERAING Station, which was formerly a delightful retreat, bounded by an amphitheatre of hills, crowned with lofty trees. The prince-bishops of Liège possessed a château there.

The ancient episcopal palace now serves as a porch to the industrial establishment, founded in 1817 by John Cockerill. This model establishment is the most considerable and perfect existing on the continent, for the construction of machinery and large steam engines. Originally half of it belonged to King William I. of the Netherlands. After the revolution of 1830, John Cockerill purchased his royal co-proprietors portion, and thus became sole proprietor of the establishment. It is now worked by a company formed in 1812, after the death of its founder, which took place at Warsaw, where he stopped during one of the distant excursions which his intelligent activity induced him to make every now and then, with the view of stimulating the industry of nations, and opening to them new sources of wealth and prosperity. The area occupied by the Seraing works amounts to one hundred and forty-two acres. They contain rich coal-pits, furnaces, an iron manufactory, and a number of workshops, three of which, one for boilers, another for locomotives, and the third for steam engines, properly so called, are of immense extent. All the applications of iron are made in the same establishment. It enters in the state of ore, and comes forth transformed into mighty engines. Twenty-six steam engines, equivalent to nine hundred and nineteen horse power, are incessantly adding to the labour of a whole population of workmen, sometimes amounting to four thousand.

In the evening, when the shades descend, the spectacle which presents itself to the traveller's view, on the way from Seraing to Ougrée is indescribably magnificent. Glimmering lights tremble in the air, on the tops of the chimneys, rising like as many light-houses on the banks of the Meuse: raging flames reflecting all the colours of the rainbow, whirlwinds of scarlet vapour, spangled with white sparks, burst on every side from the furnaces and workshops like so many craters in eruption. This vast blaze does not cause the slightest alarm to the surrounding villages, which it illuminates with its reflection: the inhabitants of the country are well aware that it is the breath of industry that excites it, and rejoice at its intensity and duration, as a certain guarantee of labour and prosperity.

OUGRÉE is a village containing a population of 1,500 inhabitants; it is situated on the left of the railway. On the right are two country houses surrounded with plantations. The tunnel near the station passes through the establishment of furnaces, on a length of one hundred and thirty-five metres.

Scarcely has the blue passenger through the tunnel when one discovers at the left the Castle of Ougrée. It consists of a square building, flanked by four turrets, covered in a pavilion style, and surmounted by several lanterns. The railway next passes for more than a league through fertile fields, orchards, and meadows, confined between the river and a chain of green hills, the last slopes of which are crowned with thick shades, which form part of the wood of Quinquempois.

Just before leaving the last hills, which are on the sides of the line, the traveller sees unfolded before him the beautiful valley in which the town of Liège is situated. On nearing Liège the train crosses the Government Line from Liège to Cologne, with which it has a junction in four directions. A mile and a-half beyond this point the train arrives at Longdoz Station.

LIÈGE (Route 18.)

ROUTE 10.

Ghent to Antwerp.—Distance, 32 English miles.

GHEENT (see Route 2).

Parties entering Belgium at Ostend, and who, proceeding to Ghent, wish to visit Antwerp, might make a very expeditious tour by proceeding direct from Ghent, and they will arrive at Antwerp in about one hour and a half.

The railway, quitting Ghent, proceeds through a populous and well-cultivated country, called the Pays de Waes. To the north of the road we see the castle of Loochristy, once a hunting seat for the Bishops of Ghent. The first station met with is Bümelde; and leaving it, we arrive quickly at

LOKEREN—Inns:

Hotel De la Poste. Hotel Des Quatre Sceaux.

A considerable manufacturing town, on the direct railway from Ghent to Antwerp, containing 17,000 inhabitants. It is situated on the river Durme, by which it communicates with the Scheldt. The market place and the quay are remarkable. The church, the construction of which dates as far back as the 17th century, is adorned with an elevated tower, and contains one of the finest pulpits in Belgium, magnificently carved, and representing, in a group of ten figures, Jesus among the Doctors. There are also some fine pictures: one especially should be examined, the Circumcision, by Vereghen. A fine picture, representing Abigail going to meet David, by Otto Venius, is the property of a baker of the town, and ought to be seen by every visitor.

Conveyance.—Railway trains to Antwerp and Ghent, see Bradshaw's Continental Guide.

ST. NICHOLAS.—Inns:
Hotel Des Quatre Sceaux.
Hotel Pomme d'Or.

The chief town of a district of East Flanders, on the road from Ghent to Antwerp. A flourishing trade is carried on in all sorts of stuffs, which are here manufactured. The population numbers upwards of 18,000. The principal church contains some fine pictures, and the Town Hall is a splendid specimen of art, by Smeyers.

Conveyances.—Railway to Antwerp and Ghent. See Bradshaw's Continental Guide.

Leaving this last station we pass the station of Nieuwerkerke and Beveren, and arrive at ZWYNDRECHT, a pretty little village, containing 2,000 inhabitants. Its church, an ancient edifice, constructed in 1242, contains a choir and some paintings worthy of the visitors notice.

TÊTE DE FLANDRE.—On the left bank facing Antwerp lies the Terminus, which forms an outwork to the city. Napoleon intended to found a new city here. A steam ferry boat plies across the Scheldt between the Tête de Flandre and Antwerp, every quarter of an hour, conveying passengers, &c., to the Ghent Railway Station. The Belgian Government are now constructing, on this side the Scheldt, a Camp Retranché, which is to be the head quarters of Government, and of the Belgian army—in the event of an invasion! And this camp is well worth visiting. It is situated opposite the Citadel of Antwerp.

ANTWERP.—See Route 4.

ROUTE 11.

Antwerp to Brussels.

ANTWERP.—Route 4.—Leaving Antwerp, we pass on the right the village of Berchem, a commune of 2,800 inhabitants. Here were the head quarters of the French during the siege of Antwerp, in 1832. It was before this place that Count Frédéric de Merode was mortally wounded in 1830, during the retreat of the Dutch troops. About here we perceive many beautiful country residences, principally belonging to the merchants of Antwerp.

VIRUX-DIEU, a little hamlet to the right, so called from a Pagan idol adored here, before the establishment of Christianity. Quitting here the line proceeds by the banks of the Nethe. To the right we see Edegheem, a village with 1,063 inhabitants; and a little further on to the left we see, passing up in the distance, Hove, and after arrive at CONTICKE, a small place, with 3,848 inhabitants. The antiquated castles of Groeningen, Het Tanghoff, and d'Altna here, are worth a visit.

DUFFEL is situated upon the Nethe, traversed by the route from Malines to Lierre (a chief of a canton in the district of Malines, sits at the confluence of the great and little N. surrounded by ramparts planted with trees, containing a population of 13,153 inhabitants. Duffel has a population of 3,940 people, and trade in linen is the chief staple of its industry. Proceeding through a country diversified agreeable scenery of wood and meadow arrive at Malines.

MALINES TO BRUSSELS.—See Route 1.

ROUTE 12.

Antwerp to Turnhout.—Distance, 24 miles.—This route will doubtless present features of attraction to the political economist and philanthropist, as affording to the former clear evidence as to the effect of reproductive labour carried out on a large scheme, which exhibits to the latter the operation of industrial laws in reference to the indigent labourer of the country. A diligence takes the traveler to Turnhout. The journey is effected through an extensive district, abounding in health. Before reaching Westmael we see the Cistercian Convent, or Abbey of La Trappe. The building presents nothing remarkable in its architectural design, but a visit to its interior will repay the visitor. The monks of this order are remarkable for the strict régime under which they live, as well as for the active and industrial pursuits which they constantly follow. The hours never speak: they rise at two o'clock a.m., continue in prayer until six o'clock, when they proceed to their daily avocations of field labour and other pursuits. They take but one meal a day, and retire to bed at eight o'clock p.m. Their house is governed by an abbot, prior, and six priors. The brothers number about sixty, who have reclaimed a barren heath of 400 acres, converting it into a fruitful garden. The view is shewn through the house by one of the brothers, and in the garden he will see the cemetery, which a grave is always open to receive the dead next. They are buried without coffin similar establishment to this exists in Leicester-shire, and another called Mount Melleray, in the county of Waterford, Ireland.

WESTMAEL.—Wortel, the pauper colony established by the Dutch government in 1822 is seven miles north-east of this place. It contains 460 inhabitants. In reference to this place we find the following in the Commercial Statistics:—"It was placed at its foundation under the direction of Captain Van den Boash, brother to the general of that name. The company at Wortel contracted to maintain 1,000 paupers for 35 florins each per annum. Other paupers were after taken. Another pauper settlement was undertaken by one person, near Bruges, who also agreed with government to maintain 1,000 paupers for 35 florins per annum; but whether from the separation of Belgium from Holland, or whether the pauper colonists, chiefly idle vagrants sent from Brussels, being of an inferior class: certain, however, it is, that the pauper settlements of Belgium are far behind the colony of Fronkisen in prosperity." Merxplas, a convict station, is situated four miles beyond this.

TUANKHOUT.—(Inn: Porte d'Or—good and reasonable). The village of Gheel, containing a population of 7,500 inhabitants, is twelve miles south of this place, and is situated in the centre of the Campine, a desolate moor. The chief occupation of the greater part of the inhabitants is taking care of the lunatic sent here from all parts of Belgium. At Gheel there is a pretty church, dedicated to St. Dymphna, an Irish lady and the daughter of an Irish king, who suffered at the hands of her father, for refusing to live in the world. The altar in this church is ornamented with some curious and elaborate carving. The altar-place and tabernacle will repay a visit.

VESTERLOO is eight miles from here, where it crosses the Nethe; and ten miles further, after crossing the Deynze, we see ARENHOUT, which has a church worth visiting. Louvain is twelve miles from this place.

ROUTE 13.

Namur to Treves (by Luxembourg).—Distance, 121½ English miles. Diligence, daily, in twenty hours. The road is an excellent and agreeable one.

VIVIER L'AGNEAN and EMPTINNES, two small places, are passed before our arrival at LA MARCHE, where we find a wretched Inn, Cloche d'Or. The town itself is pretty and picturesque, and the capital of a rich corn district, called the Famenne. Eight miles south-west is Rochfort, remarkable as a fortress, once a strong one, where Lafayette was taken prisoner and confined by the Austrians.

The road on the right, leading to St. Hubert, is beautiful in forest landscape.

Leaving La Marche we pass through charming scenery along the forest of St. Hubert. The reader of Shakspeare will not fail to recognise here the Forest of Ardenne. Wonderful has been the faithfulness with which the woodland scenery has been depicted by him.

CHAMFLOX, a few miles from here, we cross the Ourthe, and reach

BASTOGNE, a village with 2,000 inhabitants, remarkable for its old and interesting church. Roads to Liège, by the Houffalize, surmounted by the ruins of a castle, and to St. Hubert, by Orlinville branch off from Bastogne, whence the direct road takes us to Marietagne, a place of no importance, and thence, through agreeable scenery, to ARLON—(Inn: Hotel du Nord)—a small place, with 5,000 inhabitants, the capital of the Belgian part of the province of Luxembourg, and surmised to be the Ordianum of the Romans. Diligences from here to Metz, daily; and to Florenville, through the beautiful valley of Semois.

At BRUXFURTH we enter on the Dutch frontier from Arlon, at which place the German language is spoken.

LUXEMBOURG—(Inn: Hotel de Cologne)—is not less singularly than picturesquely situated, is the capital of the grand duchy of the same name, and contains 12,000 inhabitants. Its directory belongs to the King of Holland, by the treaty of 1815, being given to that monarch in lieu of Nassau, to which he laid claim. The princely house to which Luxembourg gives a name has given five emperors to Germany, queens to France, and kings to several European states. The only remarkable spot in the town is the Gateway, in the lower town, a broken fragment, and sole surviving memorial of the palace of Peter Earnest, of Mansfeldt, the Spanish stadtholder. The town is so hemmed in by high rocks, that, coming from the Brussels side, you do not get a glimpse of it until at its very portals. It is divided into the upper and lower towns, the former being connected only on the west with the neighbouring country. It takes a precipice-like descent 200 feet deep on the other sides. Its valley, which will well repay a walk, is enclosed by bold and rugged rocks of lofty dimensions, and watered by the stream of Alsette and Petersburn. The lower town is full of active industry, and has a great number of mills and dyeworks. A projecting rock, known as Le Bone, divides it into two quarters, which communicate with the upper town by means of zigzag streets and flights of steps. The draw-bridges of the picturesque fortifications of the vale of the Alsette strike one as being suspended in the air, and entering the town from the German side, their being crossed will appear a matter altogether impossible. The fortifications were successively added to and strengthened by various towers, until it was considered to be the strongest defence in Europe, after Gibraltar. It is now garrisoned by 6,000 Prussians, and held for the Germanic Confederation. The most remarkable part of its fortifications is Le Bone, which commands the valley up and down. Strangers may see the interior by permission from the commandant, who, however, seldom grants the favour. Diligences to Remich, Metz, and Treves, daily. Horses are charged for at the rate of thirty-five sous per post, and the right of attaching a third horse lies with the postmaster.

Quitting Luxembourg the diligence bears us on, rumbling along a road, good but hilly, and not very meagre in agreeable scenery, to

NEIDER-ANWELLER, from whence we proceed on to GREVENMACHEEN, where the road arrives at the Moselle, and follows its left bank, through scenery of the most brilliant and attractive beauty, until our arrival at Treves.

At WASSERBILIG we cross the bridge spanning the Sure, and arrive at the Prussian frontier and custom house, where the examination (of baggage, &c.), a severe but polite one, takes place.

The Igel, a curious Roman monument, is passed by the road a few miles from Treves. The village is a small one, and has, standing in its midst, a magnificent Roman structure, known as the monument of Igel. It is a quadrangular obelisk, seventy feet high, ornamented with inscriptions, carvings, engravings, &c., but so mutilated as to render the discovery of its origin or designation all but impossible. Many, indeed, have been the explanations given of it, as many, probably, as the number of antiquarians, who brought all their lore in endeavours to decipher its hieroglyphics. Some claim its destination as a commemorative act of Constantine's marriage with Helena, others would ascribe its erection to record the birth of Caesars, and others consider it an allusion to the apotheosis of some imperial family. However, speculation seems to be merged in the plain fact, that it was erected by two brothers called Secundinus for a twofold purpose, that is, to commemorate a marriage of their sister, and be a mourning memorial for the memory of their deceased relatives. Its style of architecture would denote it as belonging to the Constantine era. The Secundini, the family by whom it was erected, it would appear, were a noble and powerful family, who occupied several posts under the Roman government, some of which are denoted by the heraldic devices on the monument.

Conz, a small village, deriving its name from Constantine, who had a summer palace here.

TRAVES Route 26.

ROUTE 14.

Mons to Manage.

MONS (Route 7).—In its direction towards Manage, the railway starts from the Government station, where it joins the line from Brussels to the frontier of France.

NIMY is the first station; it is a small village containing a population of 2,036 souls. It is remarkable for an earthenware manufactory, that at one time employed three hundred men which number has fallen below fifty since the introduction of English potteries. The ware made at Nimy is composed of clay and silex, and is susceptible of receiving the most graceful forms, and has the advantage, from its cheapness, of being within the reach of all classes of purchasers. Nimy, through which the high road from Mons to Brussels passes, is much frequented during the fine season, and is considered a pleasant residence.

OBOURG, the second intermediate station, is 1½ leagues from Mons, at the confluence of the Haine and Aubechuelle, surrounded by pastureland and meadows, from which it derives its chief riches. It contains a population of 4,000 inhabitants. The woody line which bounds the horizon on the left, beyond Obourg, conceals the old castle of Rocout, one of the most remarkable in Belgium. It is built on a hill, sloped by a magnificent park, spreading from grove to grove and lawn to lawn, with incomparable grace.

HAVRE is situated in the vicinity of Obourg, and possesses a Gothic castle, built in 1603. It is seen to the right of the railway, in the midst of a park. The wood of Havre and the castle of the Duke of Croy, are favourite country walks with the inhabitants of Mons.

BRACQUEGNIES is a mere dependency of Strepy, a village of the canton of Rocoux, situated three leagues east of Mons. Near Bracquagnies the railway, after repeatedly passing the Haine, crosses it for the last time. From this station onwards the soil, less level, is cut by several hills, between which lie plains more or less confined. On the right and left of the road are numerous coal works, established on a coal soil connected with the basin of the east of Mons.

BOIS DU-LUC station touches the great coal works of that name, consisting of five pits, from which the coal is extracted by powerful steam engines.

The coal works of LA-PAIX, on the territory of the parish of St. Vaast forms the sixth intermediate station. These coal pits present a most picturesque aspect, situated in a woody hollow, penetrated in a graceful curve by a road, which disappears in the shade.

LA LOUVIERE, the last stop between Mons and Manage, is the principal station on the line. It is one of the most important coal grants on the territory of St. Vaast. There the new banks have been established along the branch of the canal from Charleroi to Brussels. At this station the branch line towards L'Olive and Basoupy begins. Between La Louviere and L'Olive there are five stations, Housseau, Beauve, La Verriere, St. Adolphe, and Mariemont. This branch touches the richest coal grants in the centre. The tourist who intends to judge of the peculiar aspect given to this district by the establishments of every description, in which industry is carried on in so large a scale, will visit this vast workshop, which employs in a varied and unceasing production, an innumerable quantity of intelligent and indefatigable labourers. The country besides offers more than one site worthy of attention. One view in particular, of the most charming character, is that which one discovers at Mariemont, where the magnificent residence of M. Warocque contrasts in the movement and splendour of its modern luxury with the highly picturesque ruins of the residence of the Archdukes of Austria.

Leaving the La Louviere station, the trunk line crosses the branches of the Charleroi canal, on a fixed and a swing bridge. Numerous industrial establishments continue to appear on both sides of the railway, which passes through a well cultivated country, and some orchards, whose aspect relieves the monotony of the landscape. Finally, on the high road from Nivelles to Mons, the railway enters the station at Manage, which it shares in common with the government railway that joins it.

MANAGE, a few years ago, was an insignificant hamlet, forming a part of the village of Lanefé. The place is now daily rising in importance since the building of the Government and Namur and Liège railway stations there.

ROUTE 15.

Charleroi to Morialme.—Between Charleroi and Marchiennes-au-Pont, this railway turns off from the Brussels and Namur line, and passes through a district rich in minerals, and enjoying an extensive trade in zinc and iron, coals and coke. It connects the valleys of the Sambre and Meuse a few miles above Givet, and likewise at Charleroi and Menières. The distance is 25 English miles. Passing a few stations, of no importance we arrive at BERZEE, where a branch railway leads by Thy-le-Château to Lanefé station.

FRAITE STATION, a diligence in connection with the trains from here to Philippesville daily.

ROUTE 16.

Namur to Dinant and Givet.—THE MEUSE.—Though the Meuse above Namur, is less visited, it is not less interestingly attractive there than below it. Escarpments of limestone, magnificent in their lofty outline and bold projecting heights, hem in the river as it flows gently along its pearly bed, the entire landscape forming a tout ensemble resembling the vales of Derbyshire. At Dinant the road crosses the river by a stone bridge, and at Yvoir, four miles below, we see the intermittent spring, rising and sinking regularly, every seven minutes. Passing several picturesque villas and châteaux we perceive, about three miles below Dinant, the ruins of St Castle of Aulvache, taken and destroyed, in 1429, by Bishop Jean de Heynsberg.

To the left, on the summit of a rock, half a mile or so below Dinant, is seen the ruined castle of Bouvignes. A thrilling tale of female heroism is connected with the history of this castle, and tradition does not fail to perpetuate and hand it down to each succeeding generation. The French, under the Duke de Nevers, besieged this castle in 1554, and three beautiful women, with their husbands, took refuge in the tower of Crevecoeur, designing to aid the garrison by their succour and presence. The besieged were all slain save the three females, who, rather than submit to the brutality of their conquerors, threw themselves from the top of the battlements, and were dashed into atoms on the rocks beneath.

DINANT.—Hotels:

Hôtel de la Tête d'Or.

Hôtel de la Poste, the best.

The ancient history of Dinant is lost in remote antiquity. It is situated in a romantic position at the base of limestone cliffs, with the citadel and church crowning their summits.

The Bouvignese and people of Dinant were rivals in the manufacture of copper, and from this arose a hostile animus on both sides which led to the most cruel and sanguinary encounters. The two people fought constantly against each other. The castles of Crevecoeur and Montorgueil were built, the former by the Bouvignes, and the latter by the Dinantese, for the purpose of mutual annoyance. Dinant was besieged by Philip the Good, with an army of 30,000 men. On being summoned to surrender, they hung the messengers sent with the terms of capitulation, which so enraged the duke that he, on the town being forced to surrender, gave it up to pillage for three days, and then burned it to the ground, ordering eight hundred of the inhabitants, bound two and two, to be thrown into the Meuse. The town was rebuilt by his son, Charles the Bold, but was again pillaged and sacked, in 1554, by the French, under the Duke de Nevers, who, history tells us, was provoked to this cruel act by the message of the townspeople to his summons to surrender. They replied that if the King of France and the duke fell into their hands they would roast their hearts and livers for breakfast. The treaty of Ryswick gave Dinant to the Prince Bishop. Attacked and taken during the first French revolution, it became the chief town of a French department, and so remained until 1813, when it was retaken by the allies, and definitively joined to the royalty of the Netherlands, together with the ancient district of Liège.

The church of Notre-Dame is a massive structure, of a cruciform shape, built in the Gothic style. It contains nothing particularly interesting, and is only remarkable for the style of its architecture.

Excursions from Dinant to the Grotto of Haas Su Lesse, Castle of Montaigne, Chateau de Wabzins, and to Chateaux, a group of hovels.

Above Dinant the road leads us through a species of natural portal, abruptly terminated by a wall of rock shot out from the precipitous cliffs on the left, and on the right by the Roche à Bayard, an isolated mass of rock; close by here quarries of black marble are to be found; also immediately above is the pretty little town of Anseremme. The valley is very picturesque, and well deserves to be explored. At this spot, the Lesse falls into the Meuse.

The road now begins to ascend, and at three miles above Dinant is the Château de Frey, situated at the base of luxuriantly-clothed hills, on the left bank of the river. It is a country seat of the Duchess of Beaufort, and has within its grounds a beautiful grotto. Opposite here the scenery is very picturesque. Forms and outlines of the most singular caste and character are shadowed forth by the broken masses of limestone, rising like so many giants out of the Meuse. At far as Flamignoul the scenery partakes of quite a romantic aspect. Passing by Heer we are attracted by a red marble quarry; and as we approach the top of the hill our road is enlivened by chaste and beautiful scenery, until we ascend the top, from which we have a magnificent view of GIVET.—(Inns: Le Cygne; le Mont d'Or)—a small but prettily-situated town, on the right bank of the Meuse, opposite Charlemont, with which it is connected by a bridge. Both places belong to France. Givet has a population of about 4,000 and is a fortress. The fortifications of Charlemont stand on the left bank, on a rock of limestone.

ROUTE 17.

Vanden to St. Trond, Hasselt, Maastricht, and Aix-la-Chapelle.

Page 60.

Church of Dinant.

Page 60

La Roche à Bayard, near Dinant.

Page 60.

Vue di Visé Huy.

Page 61. Park of Westpelaar.

Page 63. Tabernacle of St. Peter's,
Louvain.

Tabernacle of the Church at Leau.

Château of Bouchout.

View of Tils.

to age 66.

Promenade of the Sauve Nière, Liège.

Leaving Landen, the railroad passes Attenhoven, a commune of 700 inhabitants, and soon after leaves the province of Liège, and enters that of Limburg, and shortly arrives at the station of Velm, a commune of Limburg, in the district of Hasselt, crossed by a Roman causeway. The population is 700.

ST. TROND is the chief place of a canton of the district of Hasselt, in the province of Limburg, situated upon the Cicindria. There are eleven churches, the principal situated in a vast square, in which is likewise the Town Hall, worthy of notice. The manufacture of lace is the principal occupation of the inhabitants, the population being 8,000. COTTENROSE, ALKEN, and HASSELT.

MAESTRICHT station. 22,000 inhabitants.

HOTELS.—Levrier (Greyhound); H. du Casque (Helmet).

MAESTRICHT, the capital of the Dutch portion of the province of Limburg, is situated on the Maas, and is united by a bridge of nine arches to the suburb called Wyck. This town has one of the strongest fortresses in Europe, garrisoned by Dutch troops. The Town Hall in the Market Place is a handsome building. The Church of St. Gervais is a fine edifice with 5 towers; it has a splendid portal; the square in which this Church stands was the spot where William de la Marek was beheaded in 1485. The most remarkable things near Maestricht are the subterranean quarries, under the hill called the Vietersburg; they cover a space of 10 to 12 miles. Steamers daily to Liège, in 4 hours, returning in 2½ hours. To Rotterdam, stopping for the night at Venloo.

The next stations, MEERSSEN, FAQUEMONT, WYLIE, SIMPELVODT, KOLSCHELDT, and AIX-LA-CHAPELLE, see page 71.

ROUTE 18.

Brussels to Cologne, by Malines, Louvain, Liège, and Aix-la-Chapelle.

BRUSSELS (page 31).—The railway quitting the station situated at the extremity of the Rue Neuve, takes a northerly direction, and enters the faubourgs of Læken and Schaerbeck. Traversing the Senne, it follows the new road from Schaerbeck to Læken, and rejoins the old line of railway leading to the station d'Allée Verte. To the left we see the Royal Palace of Læken, on a height at the extreme end of a large prairie, which descends to the banks of the Willebroeck canal.

The château of Læken dates no further back than 1782. It was built after a design of the Archduke Charles Albert, Governor of the Netherlands, and is erected in a charming position. The park surrounding it contains an orangery, a theatre, pavilions, and beautiful trees. It was in this château that Napoleon signed the celebrated declaration of war against Russia. The palace is now the property of the crown, and favourite residence of the Royal Family.

Before arriving at Vilvorde, our attention is arrested by the large building with the multitude of windows; it is the central house of correction, after the same plan as the model prisons in England and those of the United States. This prison is capable of containing 2,000 prisoners. The old château, upon the site of which this prison was built in 1776, served as a prison, but only for state prisoners. Madame Deshouillers was a prisoner of state there in 1687. The road, describing a circle from here, arrives at Vilvorde.

VILVORDE (Route 2, page 16).

Quitting this station, the railroad traverses a beautiful and well cultivated country, passing the little village of Sempet, remarkable for its ancient church, we cross the Senne, and shortly after leave the province of Brabant and enter that of Antwerp, and perceive the gigantic tower and churches of Malines. The railway from Ghent, Courtray, Bruges, and Ostend, to Malines, is seen to the left, describing a grand curve to unite itself to the one we travel by. Crossing the Louvain canal by a moveable bridge, we arrive at MALINES (Route 1).

At a short distance from the station in Malines the railroad leaves the province of Antwerp, and enters that of Brabant. The village of Muisar and Haver, and the commune of Ryneman, the steeple of which is seen on the left at a distance, being passed, the station of Haecht is arrived at. It is the chief place of a commune of Louvain, and contains 1,900 inhabitants. Westpelaer is the next station arrived at; it is celebrated for its magnificent park, to which crowds of visitors resort during the season. "It presents," says a tourist, "a singular mixture of mythological statues, thickets, Chinese bridges, grottoes, and Greek temples." On leaving Westpelaer the charming village of Shildouk is passed; its pointed steeple is seen from the railroad. The church is worthy of notice. Advancing towards Louvain the railroad runs along the side of a canal, the edge of which is prettily planted with three rows of poplars. Crossing the river Dyle, then the road from Louvain to Aerschot, and passing the communes of Kessel and Loo, and Wille, the station outside the gate of Diest is arrived at.

Louvain—(Hotel de Suede, the best).

The capital of the arrondissement of the same name, a large, irregularly-built town, of a circular form, situated on the Dyle, which passes through it. We enter the town by a gilt iron railing, or gate. The foundation of Louvain has been attributed to Cæsar; but nothing certain is known of the history of the place until the year 888, when the Emperor Arnold, in order to protect the country from the predatory incursions of the Normans, built in the place of Louvain a castle, which has been long improperly called Château César (Cæsar's Castle). The Dukes of Brabant resided many years in the castle, and Henry, the first Count of Louvain, was assassinated there in 1308. It was rebuilt at the expense of the magistrates in 1375, and was the winter residence of Edward III. of England and his Queen, in 1485. At a later period it was selected as the place of abode of the illustrious Charles V. during his youth. The ruins of the castle are still remaining. Till the year 1792, when the revolutionary troops, under General Kleber, made themselves masters of the town, Louvain could boast of never having been taken by an enemy, though it had been repeatedly besieged during the sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth centuries.

In the beginning of the fourteenth century Louvain was a large, populous, and rich city, in which the manufacture of woollen stuffs was so considerable, that in 1317 it reckoned 4,000 establishments connected with the cloth trade alone, and contained 150,000 inhabitants. During the reign of Duke Wenceslas, however, and about the year 1370, a tumult arose in the town, in consequence of the arbitrary punishment of a citizen, after he had been judicially acquitted of a petty theft of which he was accused. A number of cloth manufacturers took part in this tumult, and on its suppression were banished from the town. These ingenious workmen retired to England, drawing after them many of their relations and friends; and so rapidly did the town decrease in population from that period, that in less than forty years Louvain presented all the appearances of a vast deserted city. To remedy the evil, John, the fifth Duke of Brabant, founded, in 1248, a university, which afterwards became one of the most celebrated in Europe. It was suppressed by the French in 1793, and the building converted into an hospital for invalids. It was, however, re-established, under the late government, in 1817, in a large building of great simplicity, erected at the close of the last century. There are 17 professors and about 500 students. The library contains about 40,000 volumes, and the university also possesses a botanical garden and a tolerably good museum of zoology and mineralogy. Strangers are struck with admiration on the first view of the immense edifice of the Halles—its vast and superb saloons, devoted to the study of civil law, physic, and theology.

The principal productions of Louvain are woollen stuffs and dimities, with the various articles proceeding from the salt-works, sugar refineries, manufactories of potash and starch, bottle works, window-glass manufactories, potteries, brandy and gin distilleries, and establishments for extracting oil from rape-seed and colza. There are also a number of cotton-printing establishments and several printing offices. The white beer of Louvain is in great repute, and exported to all parts of Belgium; besides which, another kind of malt liquor, called peterman, is the common table beer of the higher classes. Some idea may be formed of the trade in beer, when it is known that the town comprises upwards of forty breweries, producing, annually, above 200,000 barrels of malt liquor.

The Hôtel de Ville is, perhaps, the most perfect specimen of its kind of Gothic architecture extant; and the innumerable carved figures which enrich the front exhibit indubitable traces, notwithstanding the ravages of time, of exquisite workmanship. It was built in 1439. In the council chamber are some paintings by Verhaegen, and the Contenance of Scipio, by Luca Giordano; and in the Grand Saloon is a collection comprising the Resurrection, by Rubens, Jesus, Mary, and Joseph, by Crayer; and a portrait of Lepsius, by Van Dyck.

The Cathedral Church of St. Peter, a beautiful

Page 62.

View of Louvain.

Page 62

Hôtel de Ville, Louvain.

Page 62

Porch of the Church of St. Peter, Louvain.

Page 59.

Mons and Manage Railway, Mons.

Page 66.

Portal de le Huy.

Page 68.

St. Jacques, Liège.

edifice, was built under Count Lambert Balderic, about the year 1010, and was formerly surmounted by a spire of the extraordinary height of 533 feet, considered by the people of Louvain as the eighth wonder of the world; but, unfortunately, this bold and justly-admired specimen of steeple building was levelled with the ground, by a violent storm of wind, in 1604. The interior of this church contains much to attract the attention, particularly a fine allegorical subject, representing Faith, Hope, and Charity, by Crayer, which is in the Chapel of the Trinity, and the Holy Family, by Quentin Matsys, in that of St. Anne. The iron screen, curiously wrought in one piece, by the same artist, before he had quitted the forge and anvil for the pallet, is much admired. The Crucifixion, by Van Dyck, which adorns the altar of St. Julien, is remarkable for the artist's introduction of a number of winged boys, who are stationed with a cup at the foot of the cross, to catch the blood of our Saviour. The Last Supper, and the Martyrdom of St. Erasmus, by Hemling, should also be noticed; as well as the marble altars of the Chapels of the Sacrament and the Virgin Mary,—the latter of which was designed by Rubens. The oak pulpit was brought to this church in 1807 from the suppressed Abbey of Ninoven, near Brussels. It is the work of Bergere, in 1742, and may be considered as one of the finest specimens of carved wood in the world. The tabernacle is an exquisitely wrought piece of workmanship, richly sculptured. The Conversion of St. Paul occupies the lower part, and round it are a number of figures of animals, intertwined with imitations of trunks and leaves of trees. In the choir is the mausoleum of Henry IV., Duke of Brabant, who died in 1285; and behind it, in a small chapel, that of Margaret of Louvain, assassinated in 1225, patroness of servant girls; in connection with which there is a marvellous story told, somewhat as follows:—Being servant at an inn, the night previous to the day on which she and her master and mistress had resolved to enter a convent, she went out to fetch some wine for some pilgrims who had arrived. During her absence these pilgrims murdered her master and mistress, and on her return they assailed her with the same intention. Overpowered, after a long struggle, she was thrown into the Dyle, and, contrary to natural laws, her body floated upwards against the stream, surrounded by a halo of glory, and emitting sweet and harmonious sounds. Henry, the first Duke of Louvain, saw this wonderful miracle; the report soon spread, her body was embalmed, and a shrine erected for her honour; and there, to the admiration of the faithful, may the wooden pitcher in which she fetched the wine to this day be seen. The churches of St. Michael, St. Anthony, and St. Gertrude, are also worthy of notice, as well as the new prison erected at the Diest Gate. The hall called Frascoti's should not be left unvisited; it is remarkable at once for its great size, the taste displayed in its embellishments, and the ingenious and commodious manner in which it is distributed; it affords sufficient space for eighty sets of quadrilles; eight hundred persons may walk at their ease in the galleries and pourtrous; while the boxes are capable of containing three hundred, and an equal number may be conveniently placed at the buffet or sideboard.

The Tower of Jansensus, in which he is supposed to have written his great work on grace and free-will, and the house of Lepsius, the artist, are also shewn to strangers. Louvain contains a tribunal de première instance, and another of commerce; it has also a subscription library and a theatre. The walks formed in the ancient moat around the town, especially that called St. George's Garden, are extremely pleasant; and the quarter named the Rivage is handsomely built. The town, encircled by walls surmounted by turrets, presents a circumference of about six miles, in which space, however, are comprised many gardens and orchards; it communicates with Mechlin by a canal, formed in 1750, along the banks of which is a post road, of two and three-quarter posts, or fifteen miles in length, by which we join the high road leading from Brussels to Antwerp and to Amsterdam, at Mechlin. The principal promenades are the avenues of trees, two miles in length, ranging with the canal outside the Aerschot Gate, the new circle of boulevards, now in progress, by which it is intended to enclose the old limits of the town, and the walks to the chateau of Count d'Arenberg, the Benedictine Abbey, and Sudwater, the seat of M. Plascharet. A fair of ten days, for all kinds of merchandise, at Louvain, is held annually, beginning the first Sunday in September. The town contains about 20,000 inhabbitants. It seems to be a healthy place, as it appears, on the authority of Dr. Grandville (vol. I., p. 72), that the mortality as to the number of births is in the proportion of six to eight.

LOUVAIN TO LIEGE.—After leaving Louvain the old Abbey of Parcq is passed on the right. The church and part of the buildings are still retained by the monks. On the left the communes of Corbeck, Loo, Lovenjoul, and Beratersem, the station of Vertryck is arrived at. Vertryck, a small commune of the district of Louvain, with a population of 500, possesses nothing peculiar. The commune of Oumpteck, population 1,100, is seen. The railroad running alongside the road to Brussels reaches Tirlemont, the station of which is outside the town.

TIRLEMONT.—(Inn: Le Plat d'Etain). The chief place of a canton of the district of Louvain, in the province of Brabant, is situated on the great Gette, which crosses it. From its size Tirlemont was probably once very populous; the present population is about 8,000. The Church of St. Germain, built upon the summit of an eminence overlooking the town, is of great interest to scientific men. It belongs to the first period of Christian architecture. The tower is Roman, and must be mentioned as a model of that style. Its date is probably the 9th century. The town hall deserves a visit, as also the magnificent hospital of Tirlemont, and the barracks. The great square is remarkable for its size, as it is the largest known. Stocking, flannel, and woollen stuff manufacturing, is carried on here.

Landen (route 18) is the country of Pepin of Landen, founder of the race of Charlemagne. He died here in 640. Shortly after leaving Landen the railroad leaves the province of Liège, and enters that of Limburg. Crossing a part of this province, it returns to that of Liège; and at the station of Rosoux, a small commune on the right, of 500 inhabitants, it leaves Liège again, and crossing the river Geer, it reaches the station of Waremmes.

WAREMMES is the chief town of a district of the province of Liège; population, 1,400. The church is said to have been founded by the templar Guathier, in the 12th century. The ramparts are now changed into public walks; there is also a fine square in the centre. On the banks of the Geer the Castle of Longchamps, remarkable for the great extent of its park, may be seen. Waremmes is famous for its gingerbread. On leaving the station one of the best preserved Roman roads is crossed by the railroad. On reaching Remicourt, a commune of 350 inhabitants, the railroad is equal in elevation to the summit of the steeple at Antwerp. Crossing the brook Yerne, the next station is arrived at; it is that of Fexhe, a commune of the district of Waremmes. It is called "Fexhe with the high steeple," the steeple of the church by no means justifying the appellation. Population, 900. Passing several unimportant villages, the road gradually rises as far as Ans, the station next to Liège. Save the remains of an ancient castle, there is nothing of interest at Ans. It has 3,800 inhabitants.

On approaching Liège the traveller should be particular in watching the ascent of the train; from the station at Ans to the stationary engine-house on the summit of the hill, and then prepare himself to behold, during the descent on the inclined plane, one of the most splendid panoramic views in the world, which will burst upon his sight with instantaneous grandeur. The whole city of Liège, with its copula domes, its innumerable manufactories, and its palace, extended over the valley, or plain—at the junction of the Meuse and Ourthe—is one of those sights never to be forgotten. The traveller, however, should linger over the scene, and, if possible, stay a day or two at Liège—Hotels.

Hotel de Suede, exceedingly good in every respect. Hotel d'Angleterre, old established and very good. Hotel de Bellevue, a first rate house, in good situation, and well conducted.

The Hotel de l'Europe we can strongly recommend: landlord, Mr. Henrard.

Hotel de l'Univers, opposite the station, very good and clean, and moderate charges.

Omnibuses convey passengers to and from the station for half a franc, and a trifle for luggage.

Distance from Malines, 58½ miles.

Liège the capital of the ancient principality of that name, which formerly appertained to the Westphalian circle of the German empire, is a large and fine city, lying in a fertile valley at the junction of the Meuse with the Ourthe, the Vendre and the Meuse-Amborix. A prince of the ancient Gauls is said to have been the founder of Liège, which derives its name from the Latin word legio, on account of a Roman legion having been defeated by the Eburæ, or ancient inhabitants of Liège, during the stay of Julius Cæsar in Belgium.

The prince-bishops of Liège were, at an early period, prelates of great power, though constantly obliged to resist the turbulent insubordination of the citizens. In 1468, the Bishop of Liège was murdered in his palace by the insurgent citizens, and Charles the Bold, Duke of Burgundy, his relative and ally, instantly marched to avenge his death, and insisted on Louis XI, King of France, who was then his guest, or rather prisoner, at Ferome, to prove the truth of his denial of any participation in, or encouragement of, the rebellion; he did not hesitate to comply, and, the united armies having carried the place by assault, set it on fire three times, and at last burned it almost to the ground. Previous to this horrible catastrophe Liège contained 120,000 inhabitants. An interesting account of this siege, and of the narrow escape of the duke and the King of France from a plot laid by six hundred citizens, to surprise them in the house they inhabited, will be found in Thilip de Commes; and there are of course few readers who are not familiar with the animated and interesting description of the murder of the bishop, and bloody retribution exacted by Charles, in Sir Walter Scott's celebrated romance of Quentin Durward, some of the most interesting scenes of which are laid in Liège. We may for a moment digress, to remark that Quentin Durward is generally prized in France, above most of the other productions of this illustrious author, in consequence of the admirable fidelity with which it depicts the characters of the leading historical personages, and the masterly truth and vigour of the picture he has given to the manners of the time. During the succeeding centuries, Liège was constantly the victim both of intestine commotions and foreign invasions; but it continued under the dominion of the bishops, until its junction with the French territory in 1794. In 1814 it became part to the kingdom of the Netherlands. Under the government of the bishops, Liège enjoyed most extensive privileges, and was under the authority of a charter, securing, in the amplest manner, the rights and privileges of the citizens.

The town paid no taxes or contribution towards defraying the expenses of the state; the bishop had his episcopal revenue, and the functionaries their fees. About 700 men formed the army of the prince, but the inhabitants, intoxicated with military glory, frequently engaged in foreign service, and displayed their courage in Austria, Spain, Holland, Prussia, and France, especially in the foreign regiments employed by the last named power. In 1788, Louis XVI. raised a fine regiment of infantry in the bishop's territory, known by the name of the royal regiment of Liège; and before its junction with France, several of the adjoining states constantly kept up recruiting parties within the town, the regiment of Walloon guards, in the pay of Spain, having a complete establishment for the purpose of sending their numerous recruits, by detachments, into the Peninsula. The traffic in men was long very considerable, owing, in some measure, to the immunities and privileges accorded to deserters and strangers from all countries, who sought refuge in Liège.

In traversing the town the river is divided into a variety of branches, forming numerous islands, bordered by handsome quays, and communicating with each other by means of bridges very dissimilar in construction, the most considerable of which is called the bridge of arches, on account of the great height of those in the centre; it was built in 1037 by Bishop Reginald and commands a fine view. The houses are generally lofty.

The Palace, partly destroyed by fire in 1503, and re-constructed five years afterwards by Bishop Erard de la March, is a fine structure of the Irvine order, comprising two square courts, surrounded by galleries, under which are ranges of shops. The second court contained the Female Prison. It is now used as a court of justice.

The Hôtel de Ville or Town Hall, situated in the principal market, is a heavy building, erected during the last century. In this place are three ancient fountains, and several others are in different parts of the town; but except Delcours's statue of the Virgin (which adorns the fountain of that name), in the Great Square, there is no beauty to be perceived in them. The Place de la Comédie affords a striking coup d'œil. In front is the handsome façade of the new theatre. On the right are the Church of St. Martin and the Abbey of St. Lawrence, and a handsome row of houses on an eminence; and on the left the Spire of St. Paul and the ancient Church of St. Croix.

Cathedral.—The Church of St. Paul is now the Cathedral; and by the architectural grandeur of its exterior, and the exquisite arrangement of its interior, ornaments, well deserves the distinction. The style is invariably that of the pointed arch, with massive columns below, and light pilasters above. The choir, which is closed by two elegant brass doors, is very beautiful; and the great altar is enriched by six solid silver candlesticks of great size. The painted windows and roof also deserve attention. The pulpit by Geefs, is a remarkable item in the list of attractions. The principal pictures in this church are the altar-piece, the Assumption, by Caravaggio; a Descent from the Cross, by some attributed to Rubens, but more probably by one of his pupils; a St. Jerome, by Latresse; and the Plague at Milan, with two other pictures by Bertholet. There is also a fine sculptured figure of our Saviour, by Delcourt. The ancient Cathedral Church of St. Lambert, founded in 712, and destroyed during this period of revolutionary frenzy, was a vast and massive building, at once the ornament and pride of the city, of which hardly a vestige now remains. The dignitaries of the chapter were the Prince-bishop, the Grand Provost and Archdeacon of the City, the Great Dean, head of the chapter. The canons, who were named trefonders, and were all nobles or licentiates in theology or law, enjoyed the right of nominating the bishop, who was a suffragan of the archbishopric of Cologne. St. Materas was the first bishop of St. Lambert, and the Prince of Méan, late archbishop of Malines, the ninetyeth and last. The site of this building now forms a handsome place d'armes, or open square. In the church of St. John the Evangelist are several more pictures, and a number of images of the Virgin, dressed in the most gaudy and ludicrous manner.

The Church of St. Jacques, is deservedly considered as the wonder of Liège, indeed nothing can be imagined so majestic as this immense structure, and yet at the same time it is elegant and light. This masterpiece of architecture should be seen by every traveller. The organ and choir will deeply interest every visitor. It was built in 1614.

St. Martin.—This church, founded in 962, destroyed in 1802, and rebuilt in 1842, is noted as the first church in which the festival of the Holy Sacrament was celebrated. The fine church of the Carmelites, formerly a Château, should be seen; the front, the most remarkable in Liège, has two lions in stone, sculptured by the celebrated Delcourt. The other churches deserving of notice are St. Jean, St. Denis, St. Croix, and St. Bartholomew.

The University contains a library of seventy-five thousand volumes, and several good collections. The botanical garden contains a great number of rare plants; the system by which the collection is classified is that of Jussieu.

The Promenade de la Sainte Nièrre is an agreeable and picturesque walk.

Citadel.—The traveller should ascend to the summit in order to enjoy the magnificent panorama of the town and suburbs presented to him. Outside the city still remains St. William's convent, in which is the tomb of Sir John Mandeville, the traveller. The other public buildings deserving mention are the Place-aux-Cheveaux, erected in 1821, the barracks, the hospital, the cannon-foundry, established by Napoleon at an expense of nearly half a million sterling, and the university, founded in 1817 by the late King of the Netherlands. The lecture-room is a handsome square stone building, with a portico supported by eight Ionic columns. There are about five hundred students educated, at a very moderate expense, by seventeen professors, who are also obliged to give gratuitous evening lectures, to the working classes, on arithmetic, elementary algebra, practical geometry, architecture, linear-drawing, mechanics, and chemistry applied to the arts and manufactures. Liège is the seat of a superior court, whose jurisdiction extends over the provinces of Liège, Namur, Limburg, and Luxembourg, and, in addition to the university, it possesses a Société de Libre Emulation, a free competition school, founded in 1779 by Bishop Veilbruck, a school of arts and trade, a singing school, a museum of natural history and philosophy, a botanic garden, a society for the cultivation of French literature, the last, it may naturally be concluded, a highly beneficial institution, as the lower classes of the inhabitants speak the Walloon or provin-

Page 65.

Palace, Liège.

Page 65.

La Cour du Palais, Liège.

Page 66

St. Paul's, Liège.

Page 64.

Church of St. Jacques, Liège.

Page 65.

Place de la Comédie, Liège.

Page 67.

Bridge Val Benoit.

Le Peron, Liège.

Page 66.

St. Jacques.

Page 52.

Tomb of Rubens, Antwerp.

Page 66.

Pulpit of St. Paul, Liège.

Page 67.

Bridge of Arches, Liège.

Page 69.

Le Pouhon, Spa.

Page 67.

Chaudfontaine.

cial dialect, which is alike unintelligible to the Fleming, Dutchman, and Frenchman. The views from the old citadel on Mount St. Walburg, the maison de Piété overlooking the river, and, above all, the splendid panorama of the town and surrounding country from the Cherbreux mountain should not be left unobserved. The increasing noise heard in the streets of Liège announces the activity of the citizens, whose industrious habits, perhaps, surpass those of any other manufacturing town in Europe. A considerable trade in coal, which abounds in the neighbourhood, extending its veins even under the bed of the Meuse, is carried on, and the various objects of exportation consists in the productions of the soil and numerous manufactories, viz., iron, marble, lime, brimstone, alum, tobacco, grain, colza, hops, endive, game, nails, pottery, glass, paper, soap, perfumery, leather, steel, hardware, jewellery, hats, arms of all kinds, cotton, worsted, cloth, kerseymer, gauzes, optical, mathematical, and surgical instruments, damask table-linen, articles in horn, thimbles, straw-hats, machinery, flies, Davy's safety-lamps, barometers, crystal, coppers. There are also in the town, a manufactory of fire-arms and a cannon-foundry before referred to, and an extensive establishment for the production of printed calicoes after a new process recently adopted, and a chlorine bleaching-field, in which the operation of bleaching is completed in a few hours. Cast-iron printing-presses, and all kinds of steam-engines are manufactured in the greatest perfection at Liège, particularly at the establishment of Mr. Cockrill, at Sersaing (a suburb of Liège, to which there is an omnibus each hour) before-mentioned, which constantly employs 1,500 workmen. Among the celebrated men to whom Liège has given birth, are Gaspard Lairesne, surnamed the Dutch Raphael, author of a treatise on painting; the ingenious Renchin, who constructed the great machine at Marly, near Versailles; the jurisconsult Méan; and Gréts, whose Richard Cœur de Lion alone suffices to secure him immortal fame. The Place Gréts is ornamented with a bust of that eminent composer, born 1741, and who died at Montmorency in 1818.

This is one of the most interesting sections of the Belgian railways, where difficulties insurmountable to all appearance have been overcome. Deep valleys have been filled up. High hills, formed of the hardest rock, have been pierced at their bases. Bridges, of which the Pont des Arches is the oldest, and near to which the steamers heave to, gigantic in their proportions, admirable in their forms, have been thrown from one shore to another of the rivers and the torrents to make way for those roads which leave far behind the Roman causeways. Quitting the station of the Guilleminius, the most remarkable structure is shortly arrived at; it is the beautiful bridge of Val-Benoît, a masterpiece of architecture. There are five elliptical arches, surmounted by a parapet composed of iron balustrades and square pillars, dividing the rows of rails. The railroad passes on one side, and inferior conveyances on the other, over a pavement. There is also a road for foot passengers. The beautiful cast-iron balustrade is lighted by elegant candelabra. After passing the Meuse, a splendid panorama is presented to the eye of the delighted traveller. On the left is Liège, "the turbulent city." Nothing can be more beautiful than the valley of the Meuse—nothing more fresh or gracious than the landscape which skirts the two banks of the river. Passing through an interesting country, we arrive at the station.

CHENEY, a manufacturing place, situated at the junction of the Ourthe with the Vesdre. The railway passes the beautiful vale of the Vesdre Limbourg. The scenery along is interspersed with orchards, villas, gardens, and rich pasturage, at times varied by large manufactories, principally of cloth, all along to

CHAUDFONTAINE (Warm Fountain)—Inn :

The Hotel des Bains is a good house, and the warm mineral bath will be found a great luxury to the tired traveller.

A beautiful village, five miles distant from Liège, on the Cologne Railway. Delightfully situated in the valley de la Vesdre, it is much frequented by travellers on account of its picturesque promenades and warm mineral springs, as also from its proximity to Spa and Verviers. The season for taking the baths commences on the 1st of May, and travellers going to the Rhine, or returning from Germany, find it most refreshing to take a few hours' rest at this charming place, and 'n so doing they observe the expenses incidental to the removal of luggage to and from the stations of larger towns. Some distance further on, an extraordinary high hill on the left is passed; it forms an amphitheatre. On certain parts it is destitute of a covering of earth, thus exposing to view layers of green-tinted marble, having a fine effect. Between this and the station of Pepinster, a country, wild, majestic, and beautiful by turns, is traversed.

LE TROOZ.—A place of no importance.
Nessonvaux.

PEPINSTER.—Railway to Spa, distance, about 7½ miles. Three or four trains daily (see Bradshaw's Continental Guide, page 56). Fares, 1st class, 1 fr. 80 cents; 2nd class, 1 fr. 35 cents; 3rd class, 90 cents.

The road to Spa proceeds along the Valley of the Hoegne, clothed with meadows of the brightest verdure, and studded with country-houses belonging to the manufacturers of Verviers. Beyond is the village of Theux, famous for its quarries of black marble.

An avenue of lime trees is passed through, and we enter

SPA.—4,000.—Stat.—HOTELS:—

Hotel de Belle Vue, Avenue du Marteau, close to the railway station, a comfortable and reasonable house.

Hotel de Flandre, an old-established good house, very obliging and civil host.

Hotel d'Yorke affords excellent accommodation, and is a capital house in every respect.

There are besides great numbers of lodging houses.

SPA.—A town in the arrondissement of Verviers, situated on the little river Wahay, in a valley surrounded by heights. It dates from the year 1327, when its founder, an iron master, who purchased from the prince-bishop of Liège a quantity of woodland (in which the Pouhan spring was discovered, lying in the centre of a small meadow), caused the ground to be cleared, and reared the first habitations. It afterwards became celebrated throughout Europe for its mineral waters, to which it is indebted for its existence and preservation, and in attracting crowds of strangers from the north of Europe, and particularly from England;—has more than once been honoured with the presence of several crowned heads at the same time, who laying aside the pomp and circumstance of power, were engaged in the pursuit of health from the use of its medicinal springs. The town comprises upwards of 500 houses; the greater part, tastefully and elegantly furnished, assume the name of hotels, and offer every accommodation to those taking up a temporary abode in the place. The principal street is terminated by an irregularly-shaped place or square, in the centre of which stands a fountain, and near it a large public saloon, built in 1820, at the expense of their R.H. the Prince and Princess of Orange, in remembrance of Peter I., the Emperor of Russia, who derived great benefit from its waters, during a residence of six weeks, in 1717. The productions of the neighbourhood are not equal to the consumption of the town during the period of the influx of strangers; and fruit, vegetables, fish, and poultry are consequently brought from Liège. The ordinary water is excellent, and more pure than might have been expected in a spot abounding in mineral springs. The principal industry of the inhabitants is the fabrication of an infinite variety of articles, known as Spa Ware; these articles, the best of which are made of the bird's-eye maple, and are previously stained grey by immersion in the mineral water of the place, are often elaborately painted, and are then really works of art: the flower-painting is exquisite. The great improvement which has taken place of late years in this peculiar industry, is mainly owing to the foundation of a drawing academy in 1843, which has produced many very clever artists.

Mineral Springs.—Of these there are no less than seven, without counting a variety that lose themselves in the mountain. The names of the most important are—the Pouhan, the Geronstère, the Sauvenière, the Groesbeck, the two fountains of the Tonnelet, and the Barisart.

The Pouhan is the most celebrated and best frequented, and the only one from which Spa water is taken for the purpose of being sent to foreign countries. It rises from the ground in the centre of the town, and is supposed to have its source in the mountain of argillaceous slate, the base of which is veined with oxide of iron. At some distance to the west the slate appears slightly mixed with silex and alum, and is easily decomposed by the atmosphere and rain. The Pouhan is enclosed in a regular building, decorated with columns; and those drinking the waters find refuge from the inclemency of the weather in a saloon of the monument, already mentioned, erected to the memory of Peter the Great. The spring is equal to the daily consumption; it even loses much of its water, of which no use is made, and appears more or less abundant, and possesses its medicinal qualities in a greater or less degree, according to the season of the year. A tolerable idea of the quantity of water supplied by this fountain may be formed, when it is stated, that notwithstanding the greater number of those who drink it, the consumption of the inhabitants, who make a habitual use of it, and from 800 to 1,000 pitchers sent daily to foreign countries, the diminution in the basin is scarcely perceptible. The water is perfectly limpid, but it deposits an ochrey or metallic earth, which is daily removed from the mouth of the fountain, and gaseous bubbles constantly rise from the bottom of the spring, bursting with a dull sound on the surface of the water, the temperature of which is 50 degrees Fahrenheit, or 8 degrees Réaumur, and its specific gravity 1.00098. It has a ferruginous, acidulous taste, without smell, unless after the longest rains; and if the water is left some time exposed to the air, it gradually loses its bubbles, taste, and limpidity, and deposits a reddish brown sediment, that changes to a reddish yellow on drying. The Pouhon spring is impregnated with iron and carbonic acid in a greater degree than any other spring known. To the former quality it is indebted for its medicinal qualities; while from the superabundance of the carbonic acid it is capable of being preserved during entire years in well-corked bottles and pitchers, and for this reason is sent in considerable quantities to foreign countries.

The Geronstère is the principal spring affe the Pouhon, and that of which the greatest use is made: It lies about three-quarters of a league from Spa, half way to the mountain, forming a semicircle round the town to the south. It comes from a solitary grove, near the dwelling-house of the keepers, in which is a pretty large saloon, whither the water-drinkers resort in bad weather. Fine groups of trees, and alleys with agreeable foot-paths winding through charming meadows, lend their influence to the vicinity, and those fre-quenting this well, to indulge in the pleasures of the promenade. The mouth of the spring is contained in a round basin, three feet in diameter by two deep, covered over with a cupola, sustained by columns, and connected with the saloon by a gallery. Fewer of those bubbles that burst on reaching the surface of the water are seen here than at the Pouhon; but the most striking difference between the two wells is perhaps to be found in the disagreeable smell emitted by the water of the Geronstère, which is sensibly felt by the visitor at the entrance of the little construction, and still more so on carrying a glass of it to his mouth. This odour is, however, promptly dissipated even in the pitchers when the water is drawn. Its taste is decidedly ferruginous, but less acidulous than the Pouhon, and its temperature 49 Fahrenheit, or 7.55 Réaumur. Specific gravity, .0008. Pic-nic parties and fêtes perpetually enliven the beautiful grounds of the Geronstère during the season.

The Sauvènière is situated half a league from Spa, in the direction of the Geronstère, and on the route to Malmedy. The spring, which flows from a rock, is covered from a cupola, and connected by a gallery with an adjoining saloon. On emptying the basin it is found to fill itself in twenty minutes. Sometimes the water is divested of smell, and at other times it possesses, though in a slighter degree, more than that of the Geronstère. Its temperature is 49.5 Fahrenheit or 7.77 Réaumur. Specific gravity, 1.00076.

The Groesbeck is in the neighbourhood of the Sauvènière, and like it is covered over. From an inscription we learn that the Baron of Groesbeck, who recovered his health there in 1651 erected this building through gratitude. The temperature of the water is 49.5 degrees Fahrenheit, or 7.77 degrees Réaumur. Specific gravity, 1.00073. The position of these springs is very picturesque, and the grounds attached to them are much admired for the taste and skill with which they have been laid out. Adjoining them is a beautiful ravine, at the entrance to which is a truncated column, erected by Louis Philippe, in remembrance of the benefit derived from the waters of the Sauvènière by the Duchess of Orleans, in 1787. A comfortable establishment is attached to these springs, and great numbers of visitors breakfast here in fine weather.

The Tonnellets, which derive their names from the circumstance of the basin for the reception of the water, having at first been formed of a tonneau or barrel, are situated about a quarter of an hour's walk from the Sauvenière. The ground is moist and swampy in many places. Among other springs that take their rise in this spot, there are two at an inconsiderable distance from each other that merit particular attention, on account of the difference existing in their constituent parts. One of them is covered, and presents a handsome portico and columns, while the other, whose virtues entitle it to a higher distinction and more consideration, has not received a similar mark of honour. The latter flows abundantly from a schistus rock, and continually gives out a quantity of gas, producing an unceasing noise, similar to the crackling of flames. The temperature is 7.77 degrees Réaumur, or 49½ degrees Fahrenheit, with a specific gravity of 1.00075. When poured into a glass the water presents a crystalline limpidity, and produces a quantity of bubbles. Its taste is more agreeable and less ferruginous than those above described, and it is used as the ordinary drink of the inhabitants. The smell resembles that of the Geronstère, but is somewhat less strong. Both these fountains are remarkable for the quantity of carbonic acid they contain, and with which the ground in the vicinity seems strongly impregnated; for it is given out not merely with the water, but it is even evaporated in the clefts of the rocks bordering the springs.

The Barisart is situated at about a mile from the town of Spa, lying due South; it is reached by a new road opened through a pleasant valley, the road being continued on to the Geronstère. This spring, like all the rest, contains abundance of carbonic acid gas. Its flavour is most agreeable, and its appearance in the glass is as sparkling as the water of the Fonhon. This valuable spring was a roadside well, only reputed among the peasantry for its vermifuge qualities, until Dr. Cutler's researches, in regard to its other medicinal properties, led to its almost immediate appreciation by the public. The authorities of the place then directed their attention to this delicious source, the most powerful of all in dyspeptic affections; improved the appearance of the spot by an ornamental plantation; enclosed the well in solid masonry, lined within by a cast-iron cylinder, to exclude the ingress of soft springs, and constructed over it a grotto of the boulders scattered about the neighbourhood, the whole surmounted by a pretty Kiosque. A chalet is to be shortly built for the better accommodation of invalids, and when completed, the Barisart, now the most frequented of all the springs out of the town, will be one of the prettiest objects in the environs of Spa.

The Chalybeate Waters of Spa are distinguished from those of Germany, by the greater quantity of carbonic acid gas they contain, and, with the exception of the springs of Fyrmont, there is none that may be compared to them in this respect. When speaking of waters highly impregnated with carbonic acid, the late Dr. Murray, in his Materia Medica, says, they are grateful from their pungency, sit light on the stomach, and in a large dose produce a sensible degree of excitation; they increase the appetite, and generally have a diuretic effect. They prove useful in dyspeptic affections, from the grateful and moderate stimulus exerted by the diluent operation of the water; and hence the advantage derived from them in the numerous chronic affections connected with the impaired power of the digestive organs, and particularly in simple dyspepsia, in hypochondriasis, and gout. They generally also contain some saline substances, which communicate additional powers; and the operation of these is promoted, or at least they are rendered more grateful, by the carbonic acid.

The Spa waters are perhaps the most useful in nervous and uterine affections, and in disorders of the digestive system; in liver complaints from long residence in hot climates they are invaluable. There are two bath establishments at Spa.

The Redoute is one of the finest establishments of the kind in Europe. The exterior of this edifice, from its simplicity, would certainly not lead the stranger to suspect the richness of its interior. Besides a café and a billiard room, there is an elegant saloon in the style of Louis XV., and a smaller one adjoining for the games of Roulette and Rouge et Noir. In the largest of these rooms are the principal European newspapers; a gallery ornamented with pictures and statuary connects them with a ball room of majestic and harmonious proportions, in the best style of Grecian architecture, near which is he theatre, wherein four times a week, during the season, comedy and light opera are performed.

The Redoute is the great centre of the fashionable guests from the 1st of May to the 31st of October. In no other watering place on the continent is the society so select as here, and the elegance and bon ton of Spa, remarkable for more than two centuries, still maintains its high reputation. There are two other noble edifices for balls and fêtes, the Vauxhall and Salle Levos; they are both surrounded by beautiful pleasure grounds. Steeple chases take place in June and September, and flat races in August; very large sums are run for, granted by the town and Belgian Government.

Spa is exceedingly well supplied with masters in every branch of learning and art, for the education of youth. A subscription pack of good working harriers is kept, with which strangers are permitted to hunt. This place has become of late years a winter residence; and divine service is performed twice every Sunday, throughout the year, by the resident clergyman. There is an excellent club, called the "Spa Union," situated at the entrance of allée de sept heures, one of the lovely promenades with which the place abounds. More than 340 saddle-horses and ponies are let out to visitors, and the carriages for hire are not inferior to those of Paris or London. Hotels, excellent. Physician—Dr. Cutler, the Author of "Notes on Spa and its Chalybeate Springs." Banker—Mr. Hayemal.

Shortly after leaving the station of Pepinster, the Vesdre is crossed by a fine bridge, and the railroad shortly enters an open cutting, the rocks on either side of which are magnificent in form and colour.

ENSIVAL is the next station arrived at; it is possessed of numerous factories, and its population is 3,000. The steeple of the church, the top of which is very elegant, produces a pleasing effect. Leaving Ensival the railroad passes through a long tunnel, and enters the station of Verviers.

VERVIERS.—Hotel du Chemin de Fer. This comfortable house is most conveniently situated, opposite the railway station.

Persons wishing to take refreshments at the rooms here should refer to the tariff of prices before ordering, as several complaints of the charges have been recently addressed to us.

L

Situated in the valley of the Vesdre, about sixteen miles from Liège, the seat of the cloth trade, and may justly be termed the Leeds of Belgium. Population, about 28,000, happy and thriving. It is rarely that a complaint is heard from Verviers of want of employment; the manufacturers, instead of distracting the government with demands which it cannot satisfy, quietly pursue their vocation, and study to improve their productions: many of them are very wealthy. The town contains nothing remarkable, but the site is extremely picturesque. The railway station is very convenient for the examination of the luggage and passports by the Belgian authorities, which takes place here in returning from Germany.

Here travellers entering Belgium from Prussia have their luggage subjected to a long and tedious examination. Carriages are also changed here.

Conveyances.—Railway trains to Aix-la-Chapelle and Cologne; to Liège, Tirlemont, Louvain, Malines, Brussels, Ghent, Bruges, and Ostend, see Bradshaw's Continental Guide.

DOLHAIN.—Passengers are sometimes required to alight here, that it may be ascertained that the carriage contains no small luggage. This once flourishing town is now nearly in ruins. The view into the valley is agreeable, but there is nothing worth stopping to see. The railway here quits the valley of the Vesdre. The first Prussian station met with is HERBESTHAL.—Passports are called for at this station, and taken away. If not visé and returned, they must be reclaimed at the Bureau des Passports, at the Aix-la-Chapelle station, where the luggage is all examined and declared for transit. The railway is carried over a bridge of seventeen arches, 120 feet high in the centre, over the valley of the Gulle, passing through two tunnels, the second of which is 2,220 feet long, pierced through a sand hill. It finally terminates at Aix-la-Chapelle, down an inclined plane, up which carriages are drawn by a rotary engine in coming from Aix-la-Chapelle (in German Aachen).—45,000.—Hotels: Hotel du Grand Monarque, or Dremel's Hotel. First-rate. We confirm the great reputation this magnificent house has enjoyed for the last thirty years. An excellent table house is attached to it. Mr. Dremel speaks English.

Hotel Nœflein—first-rate, fare excellent, charges moderate, in an airy and delightful situation, facing the Elise Fountain, with its garden and public promenade.

The Hotel des Quatre Saisons, is an old established first-rate house, situated facing the Theatre, in the most fashionable part of the town, Mr. Huber, the landlord, is also proprietor of the Hotel des Bains and la Rose, at Bourcette.

Hotel d'Ar g'eturre, very centrally situated, and reasonable in its charges.

At Herbesthal, the station previous to arriving at Aix-la-Chapelle from Ostend, the luggage and passports are taken away by the Prussian authorities. The passport must be reclaimed at the station at Aix, where the luggage, for that city only, is also searched; but the luggage for Cologne is searched on arriving there. Without this information the traveller may be looking for his luggage at Aix, while the train is starting with it for Cologne.

Historically, Aix-la-Chapelle is associated with the grandeur and the celebrity of Charlemagne, who died there. The emperors of Germany were formerly crowned within its walls, and its citizens possessed, during the middle ages, so many important privileges and immunities, that it was said the very air of Aix-la-Chapelle enfranchised even the outlaw! During the earlier progress of the Reformation, the city was the scene of civil dissensions and religious conflicts between the Catholics and Protestants, until the latter were compelled to emigrate to other countries; and as they were principally the most wealthy and influential merchants, their emigration proved highly prejudicial to the prosperity of the town, which declined for centuries. Laterly it has acquired an adventitious importance in history, from its having had several European Congresses held within its walls. This invested it with a temporary dignity, emanating, as it were, in a graceful act of filial piety from the sovereigns of modern Europe towards the favourite city of Charlemagne.

Commercially, Aix-la-Chapelle was renowned in former ages for the excellency of its woollen manufactures. Its cloths, in particular, were highly esteemed in the maritime cities of the Continent; and even at the present day, the manufacturers of Aix are still enabled to produce, from some remarkable properties in the mineral waters of the town, a peculiar light blue cloth, the dye of which wears to the last, and of which they export a great quantity to North and South America. There are also considerable establishments for manufacturing needles and pins, which are largely exported. Also extensive iron foundries, machine shops, coach-makers, &c. Aix-la-Chapelle has also become celebrated for its warm medicinal springs, which break forth in all parts of the city, and afford a great source of revenue and attraction. These waters are very efficacious, but may be injurious when taken improperly or without medical advice. We refer those who wish to obtain information on their composition and medical virtues to a book written by an experienced physician living at Aix-la-Chapelle: "The Mineral Waters of Aix-la-Chapelle," by L. Wetzler, M.D., Physician at Aix-la-Chapelle. London, John Churchill.

Objects of Attraction.—The Town Hall, an edifice no way remarkable, is now undergoing a thorough restoration. It bears the stamp of antiquity, and in it are now being executed, by Alfred Rethel, a number of fresco paintings from scenes in the history of Charlemagne. The Cathedral, begun under Charlemagne in 796, is one of the most important in Germany, and here repose the remains of this great emperor. The choir of the cathedral is now being restored. There are also an almost innumerable number of precious relics, of various authenticity and value: there are skulls and bones of questionable anatomy, and sacred relics that would make a sceptic of the credulous; but we are told that these are all exhibited once in seven years, and that pilgrims flock to see them from all parts of Europe. We need not indulge in a comment upon this fact; but if the traveller makes a minute from a list of the relics, it may afford him and his friends a subject of conversation for many evenings, to determine the possibility of their being what they are described. The hot-water fountain of Elise. The Kurhaus or assembly rooms for strangers; subscription for the season for one person, 4 thalers; for two persons, if of the same family, 6 thalers; for each person above, 2 thalers. The new government building in the court of which is deposited the ponderous Acolite, said to weigh seven thousand pounds. The monument erected in memory of the Congress of Aix-la-Chapelle, in 1818. The Belvedere in the Loulsberg, and the hill itself. The new hospital now building outside the town, between Sandkham and Cologne gates.

The suburbs and environs of Aix-la-Chapelle are both pleasant and interesting. A charming view of the whole city and surrounding country is obtained from the hill of Loulsberg, a favourite resort of the good citizens on Sundays and holidays. The Valley of the Burtscheid is also worth visiting. It extends from east to west, and is celebrated for the numerous warm springs and brooks that run through it. These hot wells supply several large bathing houses, in opposition to the more aristocratic establishments of the city. There are also manufactories of cloths and cashmeres in the valley, established by Protestants, who were formerly not permitted to have an independent place of worship at Aix: but we are happy to add that the spirit of intolerance in Prussia has been greatly subdued since the events of the last four years, and we anticipate a further modification in this respect, in accordance with the development of liberal institutions and the spirit of the age.

Libraries.—Public library at the Town Hall; library of the Gymnasium; library of the Burgher School; library of the Society of Arts and Sciences; library at the Royal Government House. Besides these the possessors of private libraries will very readily afford strangers the loan and amusement of single works, by applying to Messrs. Dr. Von Sartorius, Counsellor Ritz, Dr. J. Muller, and C. Hels. Libraries are kept by the book-vendors, J. A. Mayer and H. Benrath who also circulate a series of periodical journals and magazines.

Next to the teeming flowery meads of the envirening country, the promenades about the town, gardens of Messrs. J. A. Bischoff, H. Deussen, the chanoine v. Fienne at Kaisersruhe, the Counsellor Zurhelle at Kalkofen (built by General Elliot), and Schwendler at the Elch, offer to the delighted botanist a full enjoyment of indigenous and exotic plants. Beside the public assembly rooms of the grand Kurhaus, with its choice selection of literature and belles-lettres, where good music is executed, joined to divers other enjoyments, the Fountain Eliza, where music invites presence, and where a brilliant illumination of the whole colonnade takes place at different times. A ready admittance may be obtained to the following private societies:—The Casino, opposite to the theatre, and the Society of Arts and Sciences, 429, Comphausbad, and the Society "Erholung," opposite to the Fountain Eliza. Each of these societies keeps a variety of political and conversational papers. There are also card and billiard tables, merely for amusement and pastime.

Musical and other Entertainments.—Concerts are given from time to time in the saloons of the Kurhaus. Performances of instrumental and vocal music take place every week, executed by amateurs of the town. These are—the Union for instrumental music, perform every Tuesday at the Erholung; the Liedertafel (vocal music), perform on Saturdays; the Concordia Union (vocal harmony), perform on Thursdays. Every day from 7 to 8 a.m. a band plays at the Elisenbrunnen; and from 3 to half-past 4 p.m. in the garden of the Kurhaus. The military band plays on Wednesday, Friday, and Sunday, at 11 o'clock p.m., before the playhouse. Operas, tragedies, and comedies, are given by turns on four days of the week, at the playhouse. A dress-ball takes place once a week in the saloons of the Kurhaus.

Public Institutions.—Aix-la-Chapelle has a royal gymnasium, a higher burgher school, a ladies' seminary and boarding-school, St. Leonardo, besides several private schools for both sexes. An establishment for gymnastic exercises and tilting, and a swimming-school, have lately been added. A most important philanthropic institution is the poor and orphan house, under the guidance of a charitable sisterhood lately come over from Nancy, in France. Besides this establishment there is an infirmary for men and one for women, a lying-in hospital for the poor, and an institution for the deaf and dumb.

Promenades and Points of Excursion into the Country.—The Loulsberg presents a delightful point of view over the whole of the surrounding landscape, studded with country seats and villas. It is laid out garden-like with shrubs and shadowy trees. The hill itself is a formation of chalk, and celebrated for its treasures in conchites, shells, and vegetable petrifications. Opposite to the Loulsberg lies a secondary hill, the Salvatorberg, with a chapel on its knoll joined to a farm. The chapel was founded by Louis the Mass.

Borsette are worthy of notice: the hot springs, the boiling, bubbling well in the middle of one of the streets, and uncovered, and the ancient abbey. It is here where the Devon transition limestone is visible, containing very expressed petrifications, viz. species of Calamopora, Cyathophyllum, and Terebratulina. Frankenberg, one of the castles or strongholds of the earlier part of the thirteenth century, said to have been a hunting-lodge of Charlemagne. A moat surrounds it, into which the legend tells us Frastada's ring was thrown. Departing from Borsette the way leads to it by the Warmeweler along the Pockenputzoben (small-pox puddle-pit) through a picturesque rocky cleft. At a short distance eastward lies Drimborn, adjoining to which is a delightful little wood, containing the ruins of some knight's stronghold of yore, a dilapidated chapel and a sarcophagus. Schoenforst, the ruins of a stronghold of the 13th century, lies eastward not far from Frankenberg. Its neighbourhood abounds in wild growing plants, amongst which are to be found the Platanthera bifolia and Chlorantha, the Orchis coriophora, Gymnadenia viridis and Conopsea, the Airca montana, Parnassia pulustris, Limosella aquatica, and many others. Malaten (very likely a later corruption from the French "malade"), a mile and a half westward from Aix, the ruins of an infirmary and chapel, of the dawn of the 13th century. This spot owns the Quirinus source. Septfontaines, about two miles, in the same direction. Seven springs are observed issuing out of the base of a barren hill of calcareous soil. Flowing from a highly romantic country, these springs give birth to the Wildbach (mad stream). The summit of this rocky hill affords a picturesque view. In its near vicinity lies Vetschau a very interesting village for geologists. Here the Mae tricht stratum, containing a variety of petrifications, is already met with. A pleasant way leads from Vetschau to Laurenzberg. The village church is situated on the top of the grass-grown knoll, from whence, under spreading Linden trees, a most delightful view upon the town of Aix is beheld. From thence the carriage road leads back to Aix across the Wildbach. Kaisersruhe, about two miles northward of the town. Its vast and delightful gardens, its nurseries, hot houses, and its beautiful petrifications are very attractive. Boederling upon the background of the gardens lies the Scherberberg (dinty hillocks with vast pebble-stone beds. The Wolfsmuth (wolves track) in the valley of the Warm, at the foot of the Scherberberg. Here is the only discharge of all the drains of Aix-la-Chapelle. This place consists of some few buildings, chiefly cloth manufactories. Some good flower and kitchen gardens are attached to them, and also a small park, the property of the cloth manufacturer, Mr. Kuetgens. Gardens and park form a part of the Bois de Pauline, a name given to this wood by Napoleon's sister. Roads conduct to it from different sides.

Dr Diemer, who is well known by many of the English as Medical Director of Marienberg on the Rhine, has been in practice the last two years as Physician at Aix-la-Chapelle. Dr. D. speaks English fluently.

Persons going to Hasover or Berlin will find the route via Aix-la-Chapelle and Ruhrort the nearest.

Aix-la-Chapelle to Dusseldorf and Ruhrort, by rail.

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE.—For description of, see page 71.

Erkelenz.—2,300. About 13 miles N.W. of Jülich, on the Roer.

Gladbach.—6,000. On the Ners, about 18 miles N. of Jülich. It has a Benedictine Abbey, and considerable manufactures of fine strong linen are carried on. This is the junction where the Railway branches off to Ruhrort.

Neuss.—8,700. This place used formerly to be quite close to the Rhine, but since the fourteenth century, owing to the altered course of the stream, it has been removed from it about a mile and a half.

Numerous excavations of Roman antiquities have been made here and this is supposed to be the Novesium of the Romans. Here Drusus, who built the town, threw a bridge over the Rhine. Neuss has sustained some remarkable sieges, which are mentioned in history. Among its edifices the old church of St. Quirinus, a fine Gothic building, erected in 1209, is well worthy examination, its dome having some early paintings in fresco by Cornelius.

Near Neuss, is the ancient abbey of Eberich the church of which built in the thirteenth century, was remarkable for its monuments.

On the decease of the Princes and Bishops of Wurzburg, their hearts were deposited in it.

Dusseldorf, for description of, see page 91.

Grefeld—25,000. This is a flourishing town, with fine wide streets of nicely-built houses, about 5 miles from the Rhine, between Dusseldorf and Cleves. Here there are considerable manufactures of velvet, silk, cotton, wool, linen, and other articles, beside dyeworks. The produce of the looms amounts annually to about 4,000,000 dollars. During the seven years' war, an important conflict took place hereabout.

Uerdingen.—2,800. Close to the left bank of the Rhine, surrounded by poplars. Near this place, at Eichelskamp, the French Revolutionary army under Lefebvre, numbering about 25,000, first crossed the Rhine in 1795, and turned the Austrian position.

Ruhrort.—2,500. Situated at the confluence of the Ruhr (Roer), with the Rhine. It possesses many large ship-building docks, and has an immense coal-trade with Holland, the coal being derived from the large beds of that mineral on the banks of the Roer. This is the best harbour on the Lower Rhine, and does a large carrying trade, besides those in corn, timber, and wool. To Luftballon, a public pleasure garden about a mile distant, an agreeable walk may be taken; and the ironworks at Sterkerade, near Oberhausen are worth visiting.

Stolberg.—Hotels: Hissels and Wettens. The town, a manufacturing one, with about 3,000 inhabitants, is built about three miles south of the station, up a valley studded with mills, forges, &c.

Eschweiler.—An industrious little town of 3,600 inhabitants, built on the Jude, and having silk, iron, and wire manufactories.

Horrem.—beyond whose village is the fine old Castle of Frenz. Passing from the Erft into the Valley of the Rhine, through Königsdorf Tunnel, a mile long, carried through a hill of sand 136 feet below the summit, we arrive at Königsdorf; from here we proceed to Mügersdorf, crossing the road from Cologne to Jülich. Here a very fine view can be had of Cologne, with its myriad towers and steeples, rising far above which is the octagon of St. Gerson, with its detached forts and half-buried towers surrounded with trees. Hence we reach the

Cologne Terminal, for description of which see page 75

Aix-la-Chapelle to Cologne.—The railway leaves Aix-la-Chapelle station by a splendid viaduct, of two tiers of fifteen small and twenty large brick arches. The viaduct spans the narrow valley of the Wurmbeck, and is eight hundred and ninety two feet long, and seventy feet high in the centre.

Close by the side of the line, to the left, is the Castle of Frankenberg. Charlemagne is reported to have founded a castle on this spot, in which he dwelt, and he called his Queen Fastrada. Tradition states that he never left her body, night or day, which was inclosed in a glass coffin, until Turpin the Wise opened the coffin one day during the emperor's sleep, and released him from his thralldom, by taking from off the dead queen's finger the gold wedding ring, and throwing it into the moat of the castle.

NIREM.—This village is seen just previous to entering the cutting leading to the Nirem tunnel, three hundred and twenty-seven yards long, and carrying the railway through the basin of hills which surround Aix. Passing through the beautiful wood of Reichswald, STOLBERG is reached. The town, a manufacturing one, with about 3,000 inhabitants, is built about three miles south of the station, up a valley studded with mills, forges, &c. The town is surmounted by a picturesque old castle. Leaving here, the railroad traverses a country rich in coal mines, and having houses, chimneys, and steam-engines on every side. To the left and right we see the little village of Pump, with its extensive iron-works, and, crossing the Jude, we enter a curved tunnel, piercing the rock of the Schenberg, and arrive at ESCHEWALLER.—An industrious little town of 3,600 inhabitants, built on the Jude, and having silk, iron, and wire manufactories, and also an old picturesque castle close to the line. The old castle of Northberg is next passed; it is flanked with four towers, and then we pass over the high embankment which precedes the deep cutting passed through by the railroad previous to our arrival at

LANGERWEHE.—Beyond this, through the Vale of the Wehe, a viaduct of seven arches conveys the railway, which, after emerging from the cutting, looks by the village and castle

Merc le, and again pursuing its course through the village of Dhorn, crossing the Rhine immediately after by a bridge of six arches, we enter the station. Quitting here the railway passes through the village of Dhorn and of Gwasauch on the left, and is there carried over the Ruber, by a bridge of six arches, after which we arrive at Duren, about one mile distant.

DUREN, a manufacturing town, with a population of 8,000 souls. Its chief articles of manufacture are cloth and paper.

It contains one church, that of St. Anne, and a Protestant place of worship lately erected. From here a pleasant excursion may be made up the valley of the Rhur to the beautiful village Niedhegan, eight miles south of Duren, built on a hill, on which are the ruins of a castle, where Engelbert, Archbishop of Cologne, was imprisoned in the thirteenth century; the Meuse and Rhine, terminating a little way short of BURA, from which it proceeds by a high embankment, over the lowlands of the valley of the Erft, crossing that river by three bridges before reaching

HOEREN, beyond which village is the fine old Castle of Frenz. Passing from the Erft into the Valley of the Rhine, through Königsdorf tunnel, a mile long, carried through a hill of sand one hundred and thirty-six feet below the summit we arrive at COLOGNE, with its myriad towers and steeples, elevated far above which rises the octagon of St. Gereon, with its detached forts and half-buried towers surrounded with trees. This brings us to Königsdorf; from here we proceed to

MUNGERSDORF, crossing the road from Cologne to Jülich. Here a very fine view can be had of Cologne.—(German, Köln; Dutch, Keulen.)

HOTELS:—

Hotel de Hollande, a first-rate establishment, opposite the pier of the steamers, offers a charming view of the Rhine. Moderate charges, civility, and attention, recommend the house to the patronage of English travellers.

Hotel Disch, situated in Bridge-street, very highly recommended, as combining good accommodation with moderate charges. The proprietors, Messrs. Disch and Capellen, also have a large assortment of the best Rhine and Moselle Wines for wholesale.

Hotel Royal, excellent in every respect, and commanding a fine view of the Rhine. Landlord, Mr. Dietsmar.

the Hotel de Belle Vue, at Deutz, on the opposite side of the Rhine, facing Cologne, of which it commands a fine view, is a capital house—landlord, Mr. J. A. Kimmel.

Hotel du Rhin.—Rhineish Hotel, a well-known good house, situated in the Haymarket.

Great Rheinberg Hotel.—An old-established hotel, situated opposite the Bridge.

Hotel de Germanie (Germanischer Hof), close to the Cathedral, and centrally situated between the Paris and Berlin Railway Stations, combines comfort with economy.

HOTEL FARDENO, comfortable and reasonable.

Hotel de Cologne, well situated and good.

Hotel de Bruxelles, situated close to the Belgian and Paris Railway Station.

Hotel Hilgers, opposite the Casino Place.

EAU DE COLOGNE.—Travellers are frequently importuned by officious persons offering to direct or accompany them to this or that vendor of the celebrated perfume; and as there are upwards of sixty manufacturers of this article, we have deemed it right to try the qualities of several samples, and having submitted them to good connoisseurs, we recommend, in full confidence, the establishment of Johann Anton Farina, known by the name of the City of Milan, 129, High Street, Hohe Strasse—a descendant of the original Farina family, and purveyor to most of the reigning monarchs in Europe. One of the best ways of distinguishing the genuine from the spurious is to rub a few drops on the hand, when the good eau de Cologne must neither smell of any spiritous liquor, nor of musk, nor of any foreign substance, but only the odour peculiar to the water.

F. C. Eisen, Frederick Wilhelm Street, No. 2, and Domhof, No. 13, Bookseller to the King, Foreign Book, Print, and Map Seller, publisher of the remarkable prints, medals, and photographic views of the Cathedral of Cologne, and of Berlin (monuments of Frederick the Great, Kiss's Amazon, &c.) Bradshaw's Guides and Hand-Books on sale.

ENGLISH CONSULATE, — Crasthwaite, Esq., Rheinaustrasse.

Cologne is a fortified town situated on the left bank of the Rhine, with a population of 90,000, including its suburbs, Tête de Pont and Deutz, on the right bank. A bridge of boats four hundred feet connects the town and suburbs.

VIEW OF THE RHINE.

Droskies or cabs, hired at the rate of 15 to 20 silver-groschen per hour; 5 s.g. for a quarter hour's drive, with one or two persons; with three or four, 10 s.g.

This remarkable town owes its origin to the camp that Marcus Agrippa pitched on the skirt of the hill that stretches from the church of St. Mergen as far as the ground now occupied by the Street Obenmauren. That camp was afterwards perfected by the removal of the Ubi, under Marcius, a native tribe, from the east bank of the Rhine, on which they had previously lived, to the right bank, on the spot where Cologne now stands. At a later period, about a century after, his original city, called Oppidum Ubiorum was enlarged by a Roman colony of veterans, sent either by Agrippina, the wife of Claudius and mother of Nero, who was born here in the camp of her father, Germanicus. It was thence called after her, Colonia Agrippina; from which arises its modern appellation. Cologne is deeply interesting in its historical reminiscences, as well as in the analysis of its chequered destiny, traced on many a page of overflowing prosperity. Prostrate one season and flourishing in another, this town passed through epochs different in their character as they were disastrous or beneficial in their consequences. At this distant and remote period, when cycles of centuries have rolled over since the mail-clad Roman swayed his delegated imperialism in this city, we can trace monuments of its sovereignty in the fragmental atoms of broken walls dispersed throughout the city buildings, in the antiquities of Roman origin dug up daily from beneath its surface, as well as in the marked outline, classical features, and aquiline noses of the population, whose physiognomy indicates their hereditary descent, and distinctly marks them as of a different race from their German neighbours. The distinctive mark of their Roman origin has not seemed otherwise than as a boast and an honour to the people of this city, who, in the enthusiasm of their pride, designated themselves Patricians. The consular toga adorned their chief magistrates, who, like the Roman Consuls and triumphs, were preceded by lictors, and had inscribed on their banners S. P. Q. C. The antiquarian disposed to rigidly scan the outline and extent of the Civitas Ubiorum, will trace through the Auf der Burgmauer, by the Zeughaus, by the Klarenthurm, erected on the Roman walls by the Franks, thence through the gardens to the Lach, where appears another Roman tower, and to the Marslstein; and thence again eastward to the church of St. Mary, erected on the site of the capitol, and thence by the Rathaus, the site of the Roman Prætorium, to the cathedral, the foundations of the Roman walls, from which he can at once ascertain the limits of the Colonia Agrippina and its extensions.

The outer walls enclosing the town date from the twelfth and fifteenth centuries consecutively, and are a perfect specimen of that species of building of the middle ages, being flanked with picturesque towers and gate-houses. The present extent of Cologne is about 2½ English miles from the Bayenthurm, at the upper end of the Thürmchen, or little tower at the lower end; and 4½ English miles between these same points on the land side, round the wall.

Here it was that Vitellius and Sylvanus, the latter of whom was assassinated in the capitol, had themselves proclaimed emperors; and at a later period, in 500, Clovis was proclaimed King of the Franks.

In the middle ages, Cologne was a powerful and flourishing city, and one of the most important members of the Hanseatic League, and the emporium of the trade of Eastern Europe, being the central medium from whence were transported the arts and products of the east to the west of Europe, and maintaining an incessant communication with Italy. Nor is it at all improbable that the southern school of painting received many of its perfections and improvements at the hands of northern artists; at all events, it is certain that we can trace an intimate connection between the Rhenish and Italian schools; whilst the southern style of architecture is seen in many of the oldest churches. And to-day, when, after the lapse of so many centuries, we should expect to see all traditional observances of Roman customs departed, we behold, in Cologne, the celebration of the Carnival after the same style, and with as much spirit, as in Rome—an inheritance and a legacy bequeathed by the early Roman inhabitants to the Cologneese. Very many associations of bygone years, and their events, render Cologne an object of deep interest to English travellers, not the least of which is that it was the residence of William Caxton in 1470, and the place where he learned the art of printing, which he introduced into England a short time afterwards, and thereby laid the foundation of that mighty power which has contributed so much to her greatness and prosperity.

In 1259 Cologne obtained for itself the "Stapelrecht" (staple laws), whereby all goods arriving at this port were transferred to Cologne vessels, and made to pay a high rate of duty for further transit. The dignity and importance of this city had by this time become acknowledged over all Europe: it was called the "heilige stadt," or holy city. Its merchants were highly privileged in England by Henry VI., who allowed them the sole occupation of the Guild Hall. It numbered within its walls 365 churches, and could send into the field 80,000 fighting men. But the hour of desolation was at hand—the day of its decline was approaching. Commerce departed from its port, and sought a new road across the European Continent, whilst Cologne itself, bent in craven subservency and menial subjection to the blighting despotism and withering tyranny of ecclesiastical bigotry, which on three consecutive occasions trampled out its prosperity, annihilated its commercial and social independence, and finally completed its downfall. The first edict issued by the persecuting churchmen within its sanctuary was against the Jews, who were hunted like wild beasts, and expelled without mercy. The second act of intolerance and persecution was the banishment of the weavers; and the third the exiling of the Protestants in 1618. In the case of the weavers, 1,700 looms were burned, and the owners emigrated to Verviers, Elberfeld, and Aix-la-Chapelle, whither they transferred their industry from an ungrateful city, and where they established the celebrated cloth manufactories, still flourishing in and enriching these towns. The expelled Protestants settled at Mulheim, Dusseldorf, Elberfeld, Crefeld, S. Ilingen, and other places, where, as exiles and victims of persecuting bigotry, they raised establishments and promoted the arts of peace and industry—so true is it that persecution fails to effect its purpose, whilst it ever gives new strength and energy to the emancipated victims of its cruelties. In this period the church, or rather ecclesiastical body, reigned paramount, until the French Revolution destroyed its sinister influence, laughed at its censures, whilst its well-filled coffers were being emptied, its ill-gotten revenues seized upon, its churches and convents plundered and secularised, and converted into stables and warehouses, whilst the entire fabric of its strength was being crushed into atoms.

The closing of the navigation of the Rhine by the Dutch, in the 16th century, was a great blow to the prosperity of Cologne. The removal of this impediment, in 1837, has greatly tended to give a new stimulus to commercial enterprise and industrial development. Vessels daily throng her harbour, along which new quays and bonding warehouses have been erected, a foreign communication by sea is carried on and extending, whilst the daily increasing prosperity of the city is being added to, and strengthened by, the railway communication with Paris, Antwerp, and Brila, whose railroads converge at this point; so that, if the blessings of peace be continued to Europe Cologne of to-day bids fair to rival the Cologne of the 12th, 13th, 14th, and 15th centuries, and again have her empty warehouses and stores filled with the skill of industry, whilst her population increases in prosperity and happiness.

Its objects of attraction are numerous, and widely spread abroad, but the tourist will find his visits much facilitated by making them in the following order:—

The Cathedral (Domkirch) is one of the purest monuments of Gothic architecture in Europe. The name of the great architect who designed the plan of this colossal temple is lost. The earliest builder engaged in its erection was Master Gerhard, who was still living about 1252, but of whom nothing further is known. The building was projected by the Archbishop Engelbert Von Berg, and commenced by his successor, Conrad Von Hochsteden, in 1248. The edifice is but a fragment of its designed proportions, which, if carried out, would have made it the St. Peter of Gothic architecture. The whole length of the building at present is 400 feet (when finished it will be 511 feet), the breadth of the lower church 161 feet, and the height of the outer gable at the west end, corresponding with it, amounts to 23 feet. It is built in the shape of a cross; the arches are supported by four rows of 64 columns; which, together with the half columns and the pillars of the porticoes, amount to 100. The four central ones measure about 30 feet in circumference; each of the entire terminates in a capital, ornamented in a peculiar manner. Of the two towers, or steeples, each of which was intended to be 500 feet high, one, whose height is very inconsiderable, stands on the north side; and the other, at present used as a belfry, is scarcely a third of its intended height. In this steeple is suspended the large bell, weighing 25,000 lbs., and requiring the strength of 12 men to ring it. On its top stands the crane used by the workmen in drawing up the stones. It has remained in its resting place for centuries, except on one occasion, when it was taken down; but a violent thunderstorm occurring immediately after, the citizens attributed it as a consequence of the removal of the crane, which they had instantly replaced again. The majestic choir, rising heavenwards, together with the surrounding chapels, are the only finished portions of this immense edifice. Beautiful in the extreme are the groups of tall columns standing there, like the trees of an ancient forest, only split at the culminating points in a crown of branches, and rising with their colleagues in a pointed arch, almost inaccessible to the eye that would trace them.

The late and present Kings of Prussia have expended in the space of eighteen years upwards of 220,000 thalers on the repair and preservation of the building, rendered almost a ruin by long ages of neglect. The restoration, &c., is being effected in a masterly style, and the Drachenfels stone of the exterior replaced by a species of volcanic origin, brought from Treves and Andernach. In 1842 the now king laid the foundation-stone of the new transept, and an association has been established, branching all through Europe, for the purpose of collecting subscriptions for the completion of the edifice after the original design, which, according to an estimate of the architect Zimmer, would take $750,000; of this a million dollars were collected from 1842 to 1851. The aisle, nave, and transept were opened in September, 1848, the two latter portions being covered in by a temporary wooden roofing; and on our visiting it in the autumn of 1852, the five windows of stained glass, presented by the late King of Bavaria, were placed in the south aisle of the nave, and the one executed in 1508, in the north aisle. On the whole, the transepts being now all but completed, it is possible for the visitor to form some exact idea of the real extent. The choir will fill the visitor with enthusiastic awe.

The Presbytery, in the choir, and the high altar, are works of a modern date, and we think accord but very ill with the antique majesty and solemn grandeur of the dome. Among the columns at the entrance there are two very fine marble statues, representing the Virgin and St. Peter, exquisitely sculptured in the Italian style. The two tombs, in the choir, of the brothers Adolphus and Anthony, of Schauenberg (both of them Archbishops of Cologne), are fine statues of white marble, adorned with elegantly arranged foliage, and deserving of considerable attention, as rich specimens of high art. The beautifully stained windows have been refreshed and repaired, and the frescoes redecorated by Steinl, an artist of the Düsseldorf school. The colossal gold-flowered statues of the Twelve Apostles standing against the columns are fine specimens of the antique German plaster of the fourteenth century, of which date also are the superbly carved stalls and seats.

In the Chapel behind the high altar we behold the monument of the Three Kings, or Magi, who came from the East to worship the Saviour, and present him with gifts. This chapel was built by the Elector Maximilian Henry of Bavaria, and the bodies of the three Oriental Kings, or Wise Men of the East, were bestowed to it by Frederick the First, also called Barbarossa, who carried them off from St. Eustorgio, after he had taken and plundered Milan, giving them to the Rainaldo, Archbishop of Cologne, who accompanied him, and had them conveyed to that city in 1170. The chests in which they repose is composed of plate gold and silver, exquisitely engraved, with an encircling of small arcades supported by pillars; however, the rich treasures and exquisite decorations of this shrine were carried off and much injured during the fury of the French revolution, at which period it was transferred for safety to Amberg, in Westphalia, and several of the jewels sold, which were replaced by paste or glass counterfeits. The coffin has two partitions, the lower one of which has on either side a half-roofing, while the upper one has a whole one. The lower, and broader partition contains the bones of the three kings whose heads appear (separated) in front, between the half-roofing upon which you see, in rubies the names Casper, Melchior, Balthasar; these skulls are adorned with costly crowns of gold, diamonds and pearls of six pounds weight.

which presents a ghastly contrast to the decayed and mouldering fragments of humanity they encircle. In 1804, when the shrine was brought back from Amberg, many of the jewels and enamels had disappeared, together with their valuable crowns; they were replaced by metals newly wrought and gilt, partly by antiques, precious stones, enamels, and other ornaments given by the people of Cologne, and the shrine, without the value, has much of its original appearance. The front of the shrine has inscribed on its surface the following inscription:

"Corpora sanctorum reuoluant hic terna Majorum Ex his sublatum nihil est, alibi locatum."

It is asserted, though we think without truth, that this tomb and its precious ornaments are worth $243,000.

On Sundays and holidays the shrine is open to the public, but visitors desiring a close examination of it had better apply to the sacristan, and by paying 1½ sh., a ticket to admit self and friends will be given. Tickets admitting to an inspection of the choir cost 15 gr., and are supplied by the beadle. The ascent to the galleries costs 20 gr. Between the high altar and the shrine of the Three Kings, under a slab in the flooring, is buried the heart of Mary of Medicis; and before the chapel the tombstones and epithets of the Archbishops of Cologne may be seen on the marble walls, the most remarkable of which are those of Philip of Heinsberg, surrounded by a mural parapet, and of Conrad of Hochsteden in a bronze.

Particularly remarkable and worthy of notice is the beautiful old picture of 1410, representing the patrons of the city, and the Three Kings adorning the divine babe in the centre, St. Ursula and her companions, the 11,000 virgins, with St. Gereon and his Theban legion on the others. This painting was removed from the Hôtel de Ville in 1816, and placed in its present position in the Chapel of St. Agnes, on the right of the Magi. The artist is not known, but he is surmised to have been Master William of Cologne, or his pupil Stephen.

The Sacristy contains some interesting antiquities, and splendid specimens of art and workmanship, in the shape of church plate, shrines, sword of justice used at the coronation of the emperors, carvings in ivory, archiepiscopal cross &c. high, and several other objects of interest.

The visitor will be well repaid by ascending the gallery of the triforium, to see the stained glass, and also go out on the roof, from which he will have a magnificent prospect.

The workshops should also be visited, 20 gr. entrance. The three great windows are of rich stained glass.

The Church of St. Peter. Rubens, who was baptised in this church, in the brazen font still existing there, painted for it its celebrated altarpiece—the Crucifixion of the Apostles, with his head downwards. This painting is reckoned as one of his masterpieces. The picture generally exposed is merely a copy, but a fee of 15 gr. for a party, will induce the sacristan to reverse it, and at the back is displayed the original.

The Church of St. Ursula, famous by the legend of her and her 11,000 virgins, was erected partly in the 12th, 14th, and 15th centuries. The singularity of its architecture is well worth attention, and the entire church is nearly filled with bones. On the right hand near the entrance is the golden chamber, in which St. Ursula and a few of her favoured associates lie in repose in coffins behind the altar. The bones are encased in silver, and among the relics pointed out in this chamber, is one of the stone vessels used at the marriage feast in Cana, and in which the water was turned into wine. The relics in this church are hideous, bones everywhere meet the eye, and are disposed in ghastly array in glass cases about. The history of this childish legend is painted in the choir, and represents the saint as the daughter of an English king, who, on her return from Rome, was murdered at Cologne, together with her 11,000 companions.

The Church of Sta. Maria, in Capitulo, is the oldest in Cologne. Plectrudis, the consort of Pepin, of Herstel, who separated from her husband in consequence of his attachment to Alpa, the mother of Charles Martel, founded this establishment, and built the church. Her stone statue is behind the choir, in the street; but her tomb is in the church before the choir, and has a copious Latin inscription. Over against this tomb is that of St. Ida, who was a relation of Plectrudis, and the first abbess of the establishment. The upper part of the choir, with the round arched colonnades is of the 8th century; the principal vault of the nave was built later, this church having been damaged considerably during the inroads of the Normans. Several paintings were removed to this church from that of St. Martin, of which that by Augustin Braun, an excellent painter of Cologne, and contemporary of Rubens, is highly deserving of being noticed. This church also possesses a large and excellent organ by the late Mr. Koenig, the elder, the celebrated artist, of Cologne, who also built the organ of Nimwegen. The Church of St. Maria is new, and built in an elegant antique style, ornamented with painted windows. You may also see it in an excellent painting by Duerer (representing the dispersion of the Apostles and the death of Maria), which by a lucky accident was found in the loft of the church, in a heap of old rubbish.

The Church of St. Gereon, and the Thebaic Martyrs was built by the Archbishop Anno, in 1066, on the spot on which the temple built by St. Helena formerly stood. It received at a later period, a large, boldly executed cupola with three galleries, and is one of the finest churches in Cologne. St. Gereon lies buried here, along with his warriors. The skulls of these martyrs are exhibited in the church. Beneath the church, in the crypts, or vault, there are two chapels, on whose floor traces of ancient mosaic are visible. The altars at the entrance of the church are adorned with two good paintings by Schnett and Geldorf, artists of Cologne.

The Church of St. Cunibert, near the Rhine, is spacious, beautiful, and has a fine perspective. The altar is constructed after the pattern of that of St. Peter at Rome. The gate has a fine frame in the last style of the 12th century. The Tomb of St. Cunibert, which once was so remarkable, has been scandalously mutilated under the dominion of the French. Some years ago the steeple of this church fell down. The fine glass paintings in the choir are well worth seeing. The church of the Apostles, near the new market is likewise a beautiful old German building of the 11th century. An Ascension of the Holy Virgin by Hulemann, and the martyrdom of St. Catharina by Potgiesser, deserve to be noticed; as also does the fragment of a lent cloth, woven by Lady Richmod Mengis, of Adocht, to which is annexed the tradition of Richmodis, of the family of the Lischpaskirchen (Lyskirchen), who was buried alive, and by a peculiar accident saved herself from her coffin, and afterwards lived many years with her consort very happily.

The Church of Maria Ascension, or the late church of the Jesuits, though built in a mixed style, half ancient German and half modern, has many ornaments in the inside especially a splendid communion pew, with arabesques and bas-reliefs of white marble. There are some paintings by Schnett on the high altar. The walls of the choir are adorned with landscapes. The marble flooring, the pulpit, and the organ are handsome. Contiguous to the church stands the late college of the Jesuits, in which there were a valuable library and rich cabinets of artificial curiosities. The French carried off the most valuable articles: among others a volume of letters, in Leibnitz's own handwriting, to the Jesuit Brosses; the most valuable minerals; about 1,400 pieces of Greek and Roman coins; a pretty complete collection of silver and copper coins of the middle age; a number of antique bowls, vases, urns, images, &c.; an invaluable collection of more than 6,000 original drawings of the most celebrated artists of all schools; and a similar collection of ancient engravings. There exists a printed catalogue of the latter collection that was sent to Paris, and returned in a very defective state.

There are some of the other churches and chapels (not mentioned here) that may have been built at the time when the Christian religion was introduced on the banks of the Rhine, and furnish fine specimens for a history of ancient German architecture. Others there are that are remarkable in other respects. In the Church of St. Pantaleon (of 944) there is the tomb of the Empress Theophanis, the consort of Emperor Otto II. They also preserve in this church the uncorrupted body of the martyr Albinus. The body of the famous Duns Scotus, who died at Cologne, in 1308, whose manuscripts, in 14 folio volumes, were in the possession of the Minorites, is buried in the church that formerly belonged to their order. The churches of St. Severin and St. Goeris (George) are very old, but defaced by many coloured paintings. In the former, the spot on which the Emperor Sivanus was murdered, is marked with marble figures, inserted into the flooring; and, connected with the latter, you behold a tower of enormous thickness, which the Archbishop Anno placed right before the upper and older town gate, to keep the citizens of Cologne in awe, who were disaffected to him. The Lia, or Lisloph's Church, is remarkable for the ancient tomb of Maternus; the painting of a lateral altar, by John Von Calcar, who learned his art at Cologne, and afterwards became a pupil of Titian, has been removed. The remains of the famous Albertus Magnus were deposited in the church of the Dominicans, which has been pulled down since. Spacious barracks for the artillery now occupy the ground on which it stood.

All cloisters, pious foundations, and other corporations in Cologne were secularised by the late French Government; many parish churches went to decay; others were removed to finer churches, formerly belonging to cloisters or other pious foundations; some also were turned into manufactories and magazines, or demolished. The handsome, though plain church of the Antonites, was given to the Lutheran and reformed congregations.

Town Hall.—It has a fine marble portal, consisting of a double arcade, one placed over the other, the upper one being in the Roman and the lower one in the Corinthian style. Handsome bas-reliefs adorn the interstices. The other parts of the building are less deserving of praise. From the steeple, the shape of which is rather singular, you have a charming view of the town and its environs. One pair of stairs high, on your right hand, you enter the spacious hall of the once powerful Habs, with ancient German stone images. The ante-room of the council-chamber is adorned with some pictures by Mesquida, representing scenes of the history of Cologne: of the Ambassadors of the Ubians before Caesar; the Wedding of Agrippina; Emperor Frederick II. granting the staple-right to the town, a. s. f. The council-chamber is ingeniously decorated with a representation of the last judgment, by Sontgens (1695), and a crucifix of the school of Rubens. On the ground floor there is a spacious hall called the muschel (shell), with fine Gobelins tapestry, in which many landscapes by Wouvermann are ingeniously introduced. The whole produces a striking effect.

It has a hall of an enormous size, in which several diets were held. The Emperor Maximilian gave several entertainments in this hall, which of late years has served for a ballroom, at the conclusion of the splendid carnival.

The Theatre.—The inner arrangement is tasteful (having the playhouse of the Grand Duke of Darmstadt for a pattern). It was built in 1828. The company act at Cologne only in winter; in summer, alternately at Bonn and Coblenz.

The Palace of Justice, the foundation of which was laid in 1824. The town has built it at its own expense. It contains the court of appeal, the court of province, and the board of trade. The palace of the regency does not lie far from it. The arch episcopal palace stands in what they call the Zuidwick.

Strangers will have, farther, to notice the Work and Charity-house, in the later cloister of the Minorites; the Military Hospital, in the cloister of the Carthusians, for 300 patients. In twenty-four roomy saloons; the Hospital for Citizens, in the cloister of Cecilia and Michael, in which 160 poor persons, belonging to the town, are admitted and taken care of. The hospital can receive about sixty patients, and as many incurable lunatics (such as are pronounced curable are sent to Siegburg). This establishment is attended by a physician, a surgeon, and an apothecary of its own. The annual expenditure amounts to about 19,000 dollars. The Orphan House, in the Waisenhausgasse Orphan Houses Street, No. 28, at the end of the Blaibach, for 200 orphans and foundlings, that are brought up and educated here from 6 to 16 years—17 years. A work school has also been established here. Since 1826 11,500 dollars, upon an average, are expended annually on this establishment. The House of Correction (near the New Market, commonly called in der Beechen Buets) can, in eighty small and larger apartments, receive 320 prisoners. The Lying-In-Hospital, at the western end of the Comedienstrasse, where about 150 poor lying-in women are delivered gratis annually. Connected with this institute is an establishment for the instruction of midwives, for about forty persons, who lodge in the house. The establishment costs about 6,000 Prussian dollars a year. The Barracks, in the cloisters of the Dominicans and Observants, in the Weidenbach and the Abbey of St. Pantaleon. In the Sternegasse (Star Street), you see the Jabachsche House, in which Catherine of Medicis resided; Jabach was a great lover of the arts and a collector.—Le Brun had painted him and his family in a large picture.

The Museum is situated close to the Cathedral, and contains a very good collection of paintings, the production of a school all but unknown up to the present century.

The House of the Templars, in the Rhengasse, is used as an exchange. The Casino is close to the Theatre, and has ball and reading rooms attached to it.

In the house No. 10, Struengasse, was born Rubens, in 1577, and in it died Maria de Medici, in 1642.

Of the environs of Cologne Deutz (Duis Tuitium) deserves particular notice. The emperor Constantine built a castle here in the fourth century, which is described in ancient documents under the name of Monimentum Dutienza. Deutz and Cologne were at that time connected by a bridge, which was demolished by the Archbishop Bruno in the 11th century, along with the castle. The works around Deutz were, at a later period, rebuilt several times, and for the last time demolished by the Austrians in 1673. Since Deutz is in the possession of Prussia, it has been again strongly fortified. There are four large workshops of the artillery, that are worth the notice of travelling military gentlemen. The late abbey of Benedictines lies on the Rhine, and has a charming aspect. It was founded in 1031, by the elector Haribert, a count of Rothenburg. The little town prospered by carrying on a smuggling trade to the left bank of the Rhine, under the French dominion. Bentzberg, the late Palatine chateau, lies three leagues from Deutz. It has beautiful allegorical and mythological platfounds, painted by eminent masters; the views from the window and the copula are particularly charming, and the horizon extends to 18—20 German miles. The individual spots that here present themselves to the eye, are as various as they are pleasantly arranged.

A trip from Cologne to the abbey of Altenberg will be found interesting. It is 2½ leagues distant from it, in the direction beyond Muehlheim in a beautiful, solitary valley, on the banks of the Duehn, a considerable mountain torrent. A pleasant excursion may also be made from Cologne to Bruehl.

Railroads to Aix-la Chapelle and Belgium. Express trains from Cologne to Paris morning and night in 15 hours. To Lusseldorf; to Minden and Berlin; to Bonn For information respecting the Rhine Steamers see advertisement in Bradshaw's Continental Guide, pages 114 and 145. The description of the journey from Cologne up the Rhine is continued at page 92.—Route 21.

SECTION II.

THE RHINE

PASSPORTS—INNS

THE RHINE

PASSPORTS.—No person is permitted to travel in Germany without being provided with a Passport, which he is bound to produce whenever required so to do by the police. If visiting a large town and purposing to sleep there he must exchange his passport for a receipt, (schein) in order that it be forwarded to the police-bureau to be visé. On the production of the schien or receipt, he receives back the passport. In small towns, the passport is only delayed a couple of minutes during the registry of the bearer's name, after which it is at once returned. Innkeepers are bound to submit the names, professions, age, religion, and motives for travelling, &c. of all the visitors who may arrive at or depart from their hotels. And the better to ensure attention to this rule, a stranger's book called "das Fremden Buck" is kept at each hotel, in which the traveller is required to enter all the necessary particulars.

The traveller should also be cautious to understand and comply with the regulation that requires him, under a severe penalty, to send or take to the police office, before he has been two days in the town, the ticket which he received at the gate, when if he so requires, he will receive a permission of residence for any fixed period, at the expiration of which the permission can be renewed.

On leaving the town the passport is returned to the traveller, and should be visé by the police, his own Ambassador, and by the representatives of the States he may have to pass through. The traveller should never pass from one state to another without adopting this course; and on leaving a great capital where are resident Ambassadors from the several dominions through which his journey lies, he should secure the signature of all these ministers to his passport, particularly if bound for Italy or any part of the Austrian dominions, as no one is ever permitted, on any pretence or condition, to cross the Austrian frontier without the signature of some Austrian Ambassador.

INNS.—In Germany the innkeepers are of a superior class in life, and generally of obliging and kind manners. They preside at their own tables d'hôte, and their conversation is almost invariably found intelligent and agreeable.

Travellers intending to remain a week or longer at an hotel, should make an agreement beforehand with the landlord, who will generally abate one-third of the charge. Tables d'hôte tickets can also be purchased much cheaper when taken by the score or dozen. In Germany, apartments in hotels are charged for according to size, accommodation, and the story in which they are situated.

AVERAGE CHARGES MADE AT HOTELS IN PRUSSIA.

	Dollars.	Silver gros.	Frankfort, Nassau, Baden, &c.
Bed-rooms, varying according to size and situation. }	from 1 to 10 or 12 —		from 1 f. 12 kr. to 36 kr.
Dinner at table d'hôte	15 to 20 —	—	1 f. to 1 f. 48 kr.
—— in private room, from	1 to 1 10 —	—	1 f. 24 kr. to 2 f. 20 kr.
Tea or coffee, a portion for one	5 or 6 —	—	24 kr. to 30 kr.
Breakfast à la fourchette.....	15 —	—	36 kr. to 48 kr.
Half a bottle of wine	5 —	—	12 kr.

EXPENSES AT INNS IN GERMANY: TABLES D'HÔTE.

These prices do not apply to Austria and Southern Germany.

Average expenses of living for a party of 6, not including wine, in Nassau, Württemberg, and Baden :—

Breakfast not less than.....	4 florins	} 19 florins.
Dinner at table d'hôte, rarely less than 1 fl.; often 1 fl. 15 kr. or 1 fl. 20 kr.....	6 "
Tea or Coffee	3 "
Beds.....	6 "

Servants can exact no fee, except the head waiter, who usually receives 5s. g. a-day

Tables d'Hôte.—Hours of dining 1 o'clock; in Germany 2 or 3 o'clock, and in Southern Germany as early as 12 o'clock.

Supper is a family meal in Germany. Travellers on the Rhine should ask for Maitrinsk a delicious spiced wine, in great vogue during May.

ROUTE 18a.

London to the Rhine, via Rotterdam.

The Packets from London are now mostly new vessels of a very superior class, combining great speed—absence of vibration—and unexceptionable accommodation for passengers, including private state cabins for families. They leave St. Katharine's Wharf for Rotterdam, every Wednesday, Saturday, and Sunday mornings, returning from Rotterdam the same days of the week, and they generally perform the passage in 18 or 20 hours. Places can be taken at the London offices of the Companies from London for any towns on the Rhine, as far as Basle, at very moderate fares; and in booking through, passengers have the advantage of being permitted to stop at any place they please on the Rhine, and of proceeding on their journey without the least additional charge.

Fares by Steamer from London to Dusseldorf, chief cabin, £1 14s. 0d.; fore cabin, £1 0s. 0d.; to Cologne, £1 16s. 0d., £1 1s. 0d.; to Coblenz, £2 0s. 3d., £1 3s. 2d.; to Wiesbaden, £2 5s. 0d., £1 5s. 10d.; to Mayence, £2 4s. 4d., £1 5s. 2d. to Mannheim, £2 7s. 8d., £1 6s. 10d.; to Baden, £2 16s. 0d., £1 12s. 8d.; to Strasburg, £2 19s. 0d., £1 14s. 10d.; to Basle, £3 7s. 0d., £2 0s. 0d., including Baden railroad and diligence fare.

In the northern provinces of Holland there are neither mountains nor hills to relieve the eye from the monotony of one flat surface; and when viewed from the top of a tower or steeple, the country appears like a vast marshy plain, intersected in all directions by an infinity of canals and ditches. The prospect is not, however, altogether uninteresting, though wanting in what we deem the first features of picturesque beauty, as it exhibits vast meadows of the freshest verdure, and covered with numerous herds of cattle. The numerous barks passing in every direction also tend to enliven the scene, and the close succession of farms, villages and towns, show at once the industry and wealth of the country.

The Maas is the estuary which conducts the greater portion of the waters of the Rhine and Meuse into the sea. At its mouth there is a bar which causes vessels much difficulty to pass, especially in a low tide, when there is only 7 feet of water to sail in. Entering the Maas, we see to the left the Hook van Holland, a sandy bank stretching into the sea.

To the left we see Breille, a fortified town of small dimensions, situated on the right bank of the river as we ascend the stream. It is celebrated as being the birth-place of Admirals Tromp and de Witt. At this point the vessel is boarded by the officers of customs, who examine the ship's papers, and close the hold of the vessel. It was taken from the Spaniards by the Dutch in 1572, William de la Marck commanding the Water Gueusen at the attack. This town was delivered to the English in 1585, in whose hands it remained until 1616. At this point we find a ferry across the Maas. We arrive at the entrance of the New canal, which is 5 miles further up than Breille. This canal has proved an invaluable aid in the navigation of the river. It bisects the island of Voorn, and enables vessels of large burden to avoid the risk incurred by entering at the mouth of the Maas, from which place they can pass into the large and commodious harbour of Helvoetsluys, where we see a royal dock and arsenal. It was from here William III. set sail for England in 1688. It is the chief naval port for the Dutch in the south, and may be looked upon in reference to Rotterdam and the mouth of the Rhine and Meuse, in the same light as the Helder is to Amsterdam and the Zuyder Zee.

VLAARDINGEN is seen on the right higher up, and is the chief station for the herring fishery of Ho land, in which a hundred or more vessels are engaged annually. The fishery season lasts from the 2nd of June to the 1st of November. The chartering of the herring fleet is an interesting affair; some time about the middle of June the officers to be employed assemble at the Stadhuis, or Town Hall, and take an oath of fidelity to the laws of the fishery convention. After this they raise their flags, generally on the 14th of June, and proceed to the church to assist at the service specially celebrated for the occasion, with the object of praying for a fruitful season. The 15th of June, on which day they weigh anchor, is generally kept as a gala day devoted to amusement and feasting. The first fruits of the expedition are looked for with much anxious expectation, watchmen being placed on the Vlaardingen steeples to keep a look out for the vessel which is despatched home with the first fish taken. A cargo of herrings realizes about 800 florins, and the King and his Ministers are presented with the first kegs.

Closer to Rotterdam, situated at a distance from the river side, is Schiedam, with 12,000 inhabitants. This place is famous for its distilleries, with the refuse of which upwards of 30,000 pigs are fed annually. It has the appearance of a huge forge, which vomits, every minute, volumes of smoke that covers the town in a black mist.

M

Rotterdam is next seen at a turn of the river. The Maas is facing the town, and is from 40 to 45 feet deep, thus enabling vessels of the largest tonnage to moor close to the houses. The steamers land their passengers on the quay. It is a very fine one and singularly picturesque, in consequence of the large avenue of beautiful elms which stretch along its banks, offering a delightful shade. These trees give the quay its name—Boompjes which means little trees. On this quay is situated the Custom House, to which the passengers' luggage is conveyed for examination. It also serves as a favourite promenade for the inhabitants, and has situated on it some excellent houses, and many of the best hotels.

Rotterdam.—Hotels:

Hotel d'York, deservedly recommended; also Hotel St. Lucas, good, but principally frequented by commercial travellers of the smoking class.

CONVEYANCES.—Railways to Hague, Leyden, Haarlem, Amsterdam, Utrecht, Arnhem, Emmenrich, and Oberhausen (for all parts of Germany), see pp. 69 and 70 of Continental Guide. Railway to Breda and Antwerp, see p. 68. For travelling to the interior, canal boats hourly to Delft, and Hague; fare to the latter place 75 cents.

Rotterdam is situated on the right bank of the Maas, with a population of 82,600. The form of the town is that of a triangle, made up of about an equal proportion of streets and canals, the principal of the latter being the Leuve, Oude, and Nieuwe, which discharge themselves into the Maas and serve as a medium of communication between that and the several other canals by which the town is intersected.

The visitor to Rotterdam, for the first time, will be surprised at the large number of draw-bridges keeping up a communication. The canals, crowded with vessels discharging their cargoes at the very doors of the shops and warehouses, will appear quite as singular. Thus the easy communication with the sea has contributed largely to swell the tide of prosperity for Rotterdam. It has constantly employed in the service of its foreign commerce over eighty merchant ships, which make the voyage to and from India in nine months. The chief foreign trade is with Batavia, but a good traffic is also maintained in the productions of the East. Its corn and provision trades are also very great, whilst its dockyards supplied with timber from the upper parts of Germany contiguous to the Rhine, make it the seat of a busy industry in ship-building.

The appearance of the town, its novel and attractive combination of trees, bridges, water, and vessels; its old houses overhanging their foundation as if about falling in ruins; its shops and the semi-barbarous images in their front, together with its many other peculiar scenes and customs, will serve to amuse the visitor who enters it for the first time, much better than any lengthened description we can give of its buildings and institutions. The high street called Hoogstraat, is built upon an enormous dyke or dam, which stands at the junction of the Rotte stream, from whence is derived the name Rotterdam, and Maas. The town is intersected by this dyke, between which and the quay Boompjes, the most modern part of the town is built on ground gained from the Maas.

The chief object of attraction in Rotterdam is the bronze statue of Erasmus, standing on a bridge of considerable width, which spans a canal, and on which is held a market. The house in which Erasmus was born, in 1467, is now a gin shop, and is seen in the Breede Kerk Straat: it bears the following inscription—"Hic est parva domus, magnus quæ natus Erasmus." His real name was Gerrit-Gerrits, which he changed into Desiderius Erasmus.

The Church of St. Lawrence, called the Groot Kerk, is a structure of the 15th century, being built in 1472. Its architectural proportions are much neglected and even mutilated, but still preserve a very fine appearance. It is surmounted by a tower, from which can be obtained an excellent view of the town and surrounding country, which like all scenes in Holland, is varied and picturesque, presenting a combination of wood and water, avenues and farm-yards stretching along a singularly level horizon, but broken by an occasional church spire or windmill peering through the distance. This church contains a large number of monuments, among which are those of admirals de Witt and Codener, erected by the states-general. The organ will attract attention on account of its immense size and sweet tone: it has 6,500 pipes, 91 stops, and its largest metal pipe is 36 feet long, and 17 inches in diameter. It is 90 feet high, and considered superior to the organ of Haarlem. The organist will play it on the occasion of any visit, on being paid ten guilders.

The Exchange, over which, in a room, is a fine collection of philosophical instruments. The Town Hall or Stadhuis is a fine building, having a composite portico. The house formerly occupied by the East India Company, near the Hotel des Pays Bas, will interest. The dock-yard, though small, is worth a visit, and can be seen by an order from any respectable housekeeper. In it is preserved the stern of the Royal Charles, which was taken by the Dutch in 1667. The collection of pictures bequeathed to the town by M. Boymans, can be seen daily, except Monday, by paying a small fee.

English is generally spoken.

The English Church is on the east side of the Harnig-blut, and has emblazoned on its portal, the arms of Queen Anne and of the Duke of Marlborough.

The Scotch Presbyterian Church is on the Schottische Dijk. There are many places of amusement in the suburbs, such as tea gardens, in which are billiard-rooms and skittle-grounds, &c. The public walk, outside the eastern gate, called the Plantage, is much frequented: and there are also several clubs, to which strangers are admitted on being introduced by a member, and in which English as well as continental newspapers are taken.

Post Office (Net Post Kantoor), is situated on the Nynhaven, in the Wynstratt.

Trekschuiten or dray boats ply every hour to Delft and the Hague.

Diligences daily to Utrecht, Nymegen, Gonda, Antwerp, and Breda. Steamers to Nymegen every morning in summer and every second morning during the winter months.

Steamers daily to Moerdijk in three hours; to Middleburg, in Zealand, in nine; to Dort, twice daily. Daily to Gonda and back. To Havre and Dunkirk six times a month. To London every Tuesday, Wednesday, and Saturday; to Antwerp daily, in from eight to ten hours; to Bois le Due daily, in ten hours; to Hull once a week. For the hours of sailing and further particulars, see Bradshaw's Continental Guide.

From Maas to Katendrecht a ferry boat plies every half hour, fare 15 cents. Here the left bank of the Maas is formed by an island called IJsselmonde, and which, though only fifteen miles in length, by seven in width, is surrounded and intersected by dykes to the extent of 2000 miles in length.

ROUTE 19.

THE RHINE (A.)

Rotterdam to Nymegen.

The voyage from Rotterdam to Nymegen generally occupies twelve hours, and if for a party, where there are several ladies, the state cabin should be engaged.

The "Waal" is the largest of the arms into which the Rhine divides itself on reaching Holland.

Leaving Rotterdam, we first pass on the left, the guard-ship, and Feyenoord, the seat of a large engineering and foundry establishment, where we see the banks at both sides dotted with numerous picturesque villas and summer residences. At the Spaniard's-Diep, windmills, cottages, and ship-yards are seen, and at this point the Lek joins the Maas.

DORT OR DORTRECHT.—Inns :

Bellevue.

Gonde Leeum.

Wapen van America.

Dort is situated on the left bank, on the expanse of the Maas. It has a population of 21,000 inhabitants, and is the seat of a considerable trade. It was here met, in 1572, the first assembly of the states-general, after Holland had revolted from the Spanish yoke. By one of its decrees, the Prince of Orange was declared governor of the country.

The famous assembly of Protestant divines, known as the "Synod of Dort" was held here in 1618-19, in the house now called Kloveniers Doelen. The room in which this celebrated synod was held is still preserved unaltered, though often used as a ball-room. Its sittings lasted six months, and numbered 152, the upshot of which was to confirm as the established faith, the Calvinistic doctrine of Predestination and Grace, and condemn Arminius and his followers. The president, in closing the sittings, declared "its miraculous labours had made hell tremble."

The Gothic Church has a beautiful square tower, and is remarkable for its exquisitely carved white marble pulpit, its various monuments, and massive gold church plate. The Mint will also repay a visit, as a building of the fifteenth century.

Dort is the chief station for the rafts (See Route 21. The largest East Indiamen can sail up to the quays at Dort. The country about is very low, and its every hollow is so full of water that fears are entertained that the entire should be swallowed by the waters, were the Rhine to rise even a few inches. Sailing through very intricate sandbanks, we arrive at Gorcum, alias GORRICUM, an antiquated town to the left, situated at the junction of the Meuse and Linge, and is connected with Vianen on the Leek, by the canal of Frederick. This was one of the first places taken from the Spaniards by the water geusen, in 1572, who, under their chief officer Lumey, murdered nineteen Roman Catholic priests, for which savage act he was degraded by the States General. Opposite Gorcum, on the left, is Worcum, and we see also to the left

The Castle of Loevestein, famous as the prison of Grotius, 1609. It stands on a point of the island of Bommel. Grotius was concealed in a box by his wife, and so removed out of prison by his servant maid, who conveyed it to Gorcum, to the house of an Armenian friend named Jacob Daatselaar, where he was relieved from his narrow cell and escaped to Brabant. Madame de Groot was not long detained in prison, and soon after rejoined her husband in Paris.

BOMMEL, to the left, once a fortified place, destroyed in 1629.

TRIEL, to the right, an agreeable little town, with 3,600 inhabitants, and famous as the birth-place of General Chassé.

Nymegen.—Hotels:

H. Des Pays Bays, (dear.)

Plaats Royal.

Hotel de Francfort :

Rotterdam Wagen, from where the diligences start.

Nymegen, called in German Nyegen, contains 24,200 inhabitants, and is situated on the left bank of the Waal. It is a strongly-defended frontier town, built on the slope of the hill Hoenderberg, where the Romans pitched a camp.

to defend their Belgic territories against the predatory invasions of the Germans. Passports are taken from travellers here, and should be again obtained over night by those intending to start early on the following morning. The principal buildings in Nymegen are the Town Hall, a structure of the sixteenth century, having in front two rows of statues of the emperors of Germany who had in any way conferred privileges on or benefitted the town. Its curiosities are the sword with which was beheaded the Counts Egmont and Horn, portraits of the ambassadors who attended on the occasion of the signing of the treaty in 1678, between Charles II. of Spain and Louis XIV. and some Roman antiquities.

St. Stephen's Church, a brick edifice of a good cruciform shape, erected 1272, is a pretty specimen of the Gothic style, and remarkable for its ancient choir, in which stands the monument of Catherine de Bourbon, wife of Adolphus of Egmont, Duke of Guelders. Her effigy is executed in copper, and surrounded with devices and figures of the Evangelists. On an eminence here stand fragments of the church of the castle of Valkenhof, destroyed by the French in 1794, and said to have been built by Julius Cæsar, and inhabited by Charlemagne. In addition to this fragment we see on the brow of the hill a circular chapel or baptistery, of the thirteenth century; adjoining it is a very agreeable promenade surrounded by trees. Further up is the café called Belviders. A very fine view is enjoyed from it, comprising a good prospect of the Rhine, Waal, and IJssel, and the Maas on the south; good views may also be obtained from Berg-en-dal, Beek, and Upbergen, close by.

Nymegen and its attractive spots can be explored in two hours.

Diligence to Arnheim four times daily, performing the journey in two hours, and meeting the railway trains to Utrecht and Amsterdam daily. Steamers to Cologne, down the Rhine, and to Rotterdam.

ROUTE 20.

THE RHINE (B).

Arnheim to Cologne.

The best course to adopt in this route is to proceed from Rotterdam to Arnheim by rail; but should persons prefer the journey by water, they will find a steamer starting from Arnheim each morning, which arrives at Cologne in about 28 hours. A steamer also leaves Cologne at 7 a.m. for Arnheim, where it arrives early enough to permit the passenger to catch the last train thence to Amsterdam. The steamboat which starts from Arnheim each morning at 6 a.m. arrives at Cologne by 11 p.m., but should tourists wish to disembark at Duisburg they will find a train start thence and arriving at Cologne at 6 p.m.

The confluence of the Waal and the Lower Rhine, or Leck, the two branches of the Rhine takes place at about an equal distance of eight or nine miles above Nymegen and Arnheim. Previous to sailing into the united waters we should take a glance at the dams, dykes, and jetties made up of earth and wicker work stretching along the shore, or into the river, and regulating the course of the waters, and so governing them, that at all times, whether in flood or low-water, no more than two-thirds of the tributaries should enter into the Waal, and only one-third into the Leck. The importance of these hydraulic works cannot be over estimated, and on them depend the physical existence of Holland. They are watched over by engineers, who attend to the variations of the current and preserve a balance of power in the stream by throwing out new works when necessary. These works, and the vigilance used by the engineers in strengthening them, saved the country from being drowned in the floods of 1784.

At AART a safety-valve is formed by a dam thrown across an old arm of the Rhine or abandoned channel, into which the waters could be turned in case of a great rise of the Rhine. The Dutch and Prussian governments have settled by a convention, that the Rhine should be permitted an outlet through this dam in the event of its waters at Arnheim attaining a certain height, and in such a case a new passage to the sea would be formed for the Rhine in less than five minutes, which would suffice to sweep away the dam and its erections.

LOBITH is seen to the right, and marks the frontiers of Holland and Prussia. It is also the station of the Dutch custom-house, and the steamer, in her descent, is delayed an hour or more in the examination of baggage, &c., by the officers. Opposite Lobith is the now decayed fortress of Schenkenschanz, once a formidable and much-prized stronghold, rendered important ition on the tongue of land stretching thine and formed by the forking of that com close to this spot can be seen the id steeples of Cleves. The next imation reached is ron (Inn: des Pays Bas) is situated on, and is the first Prussian garrisoned seat, with a population of 5,100. It is the siderable industry, and has a very clean appearance. The church of St. Alde- the minster, the oldest, on the right he Rhine, are the only objects of attrac- est. Here an examination of baggage ce by the custom-house officers, and orts are asked for and visé by the police. from Emmerich, we see the small town on the right arm.

es, on the left, remarkable for its double urch, and as being the castra vitina of ans. It has a population of 3,500, and renders it memorable as being the spot e emperor Maximilian had beheaded n, and the Theban legion.

. (Inn: Dornbuschel) is situated at the e of the Lippe and the Rhine, diagon- site an artificial island formed in 1785, of the river, and is the chief stronghold irth-west frontier of Prussia. It con- 00 inhabitants, and is the emporium of tive trade. Here the Rhine is crossed ge of boats, and is divided in two arms and of Blüderich. The Rathaus is the lding worth seeing. Close to Wesel a monument to the memory of the officers shot here in 1803, by the French. eft, facing Wesel, is Fort Blücher. At so, Rapin wrote his history of England. Drsoy to the left, we see on the right, r (Hack's Inn) the coal depôt, situated outh of the Ruhr, where it discharges o the Rhine. Nearly 3,000,000 tons of produce of the fields on the banks of the e deposited here annually.

ro (Inns: Post; Rheinischer Hof) is on the Lys, and is a town of considerable turing importance, with a population of uisburg is connected with Cologne by den and Cologne railway, and persons o go on to Cologne or Baden will do ave the steamer here, if they wish to a, and take the train.

The Valley of the Ruhr deserves to be explored if time permit. The following will be found its most interesting spots: Hohen, Selgburg, Blankenstein, Werden, Kettling, and Mulheim.

UNDIGER—Is on the left bank, seated in a fertile plain, and encircled by poplar-trees. It has about 2,000 inhabitants, whose chief means of subsistence arise from navigation, pasturage, and trade. Not far from this place is Eichelskamp, where the French in 1795, first crossed the Rhine, with 25,000 men under the command of Lefebvre. On the right we see Calcum, a railway station, about $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles from which is Kaiserworth, for a long period the residence of the German emperors. It was formerly an island, and still contains the ruins of a castle, built by Pepin d'Heristal, from which the Archbishop of Cologne, Hanno, carried off the emperor Henry II., when only a child of two years, from his mother. Its church is a remarkable building of the 13th century, and contains the shrine of St. Subert, an English monk, who preached here in the 8th century. In this place also, there is a charitable institution, founded by Fleidner, a protestant clergyman.

Dusseldorf.—Hotels:

Breidenbacher Hof, or Hotel Disch. First rate, and highly recommended, most central y and conveniently situated in the town.

Hotel de l'Europe, near the Railway Station, Post Office, and landing place of the Rhine Steamers, an excellent house, and highly recommended. Landlord, Mr. Gostzen.

Hotel Prince of Prussia. We can strongly recommend this as being very comfortable, the landlady is very attentive.

Hotel Domhardt, a very good hotel, situated in the centre of the town.

Dusseldorf is one of the prettiest and neatest towns on the Rhine, containing 35,000 inhabitants. It is seated on the right bank of the Rhine, and is capital of the duchy of Berg. It was once a fortified town, but its fortifications, since the peace of Lunerville, have disappeared, and their place is occupied by gardens and agreeable walks. Its objects of attraction are few, indeed it may be said that the School of Painting is the only one; it occupies the palace erected by the elector John William, whose statue of bronze is seen in the market-place. The entire building was destroyed by the French in 1794, save one wing, but the main structure, &c., has been rebuilt. The celebrated gallery of pictures were removed to Munich in 1805; the present collection is much inferior. Tasso and the two Leonoras, by Carl Sohn, are brilliant executions of modern date.

There is also an interesting collection of drawings by the old masters, amounting to 14,250 specimens, among which are many by Raphael, M. Angelo, Titian, and other celebrities. There are also copies of 300 water-colour drawings from the works of the different Italian schools, from the 4th century. They are executions by Rambout. The public library is immediately below this gallery.

The Dusseldorf School of Painting, founded in 1828, by Cornelius, has an exhibition each summer of the paintings by water-colour artists. It opens in July, and continues open until Sept.

Mr. Schulte's Gallery of Modern Paintings, at 481, Rue de L'Allée, is always worthy a visit, from its being constantly renewed by the new pictures which are exhibited there as they are finished.

The Hoffkirche or church of St. Andrew, has some good paintings by Dusseldorf artists of the existing school. The church of St. Lambert, in which there are several interesting monuments; the Jesuit church, containing a painting by Deger, representing the virgin as she stands on clouds, holding the saviour, are the only other objects of public interest.

The Hofgarten, one of the most beautiful gardens in Germany, will repay a visit, it is lined with sweet walks, and commands a good view of the Rhine.

Dusseldorf is the seat of the provincial parliament of the Rhenish provinces, and is the residence of Prince Frederick of Prussia. Its situation on the Rhine contributes altogether to its prosperous and thriving condition. It is the emporium of the merchandise sent from the duchy of Berg, and of the iron ware from Solingen, as well as of the cloths and cottons of Elberfeld. Of the three quarters into which it is divided, Karlstadt and Neustadt are the best and cleanest, contrasting deeply with the close filthy streets of Altstadt.

English Church Services at the German protestant temple, Berg Strasse, at 11½ a.m. and 8½ p.m. on Sundays.

PEMPelfort, situated on the east of the town, is remarkable as being the residence of the philosopher Jacobi, and the resort of Goethe, Wieland, Stolberg, and other literary celebrities.

HELLDORF—Twelve miles from Dusseldorf near Calcum Station, on the line to Duisburg, will repay a visit. Here is the house of Count Spee, which contains some excellent frescoes.

DUSSELTAL—Three miles from Dusseldorf, is also worth a visit. It is an asylum for destitute children, 140 of which receive an useful education, and are taught trades.

Railways—Dusseldorf to Cologne, time one hour; to Elberfeld, Minden, Hanover, Magdeburg, and Berlin in 9 hours.

The steamer occupies between Dusseldorf and Cologne, 5 hours in ascending, and 2½ hours in descending.

Leaving Dusseldorf, we see on our left, the steeple of Neuss, where Drusus, it is believed, threw a bridge over the Rhine.

BENRATH STAB.—From here we see a handsome chateau, built by the electors of Cleves, and occupied by Murat, when Grand Duke.

Passing Zona, with its numerous towers, we cross the Couppe and arrive at MULHEIM, on our right, a fine and prosperous town. Not far removed, is Stammheim, remarkable for its Gothic chapel, and as the residence of Count Fürstenberg.

ROUTE 21.

THE RHINE (C)

Cologne to Coblenz.

The Rhine, over the entire aspect and character of which the Supreme Architect seems to have shed brilliant streaks of glorious scenery and picturesque grandeur, is no less remarkable for the combination of natural loveliness that characterises its scenery, than for the historical traditions interwoven with every phase of its history, representing Roman conquests and defeats; feudal events full of chivalry and daring; and the wars and negotiations of modern days. Its banks possess an interest, not only as having reposing beside them the bones and ashes of emperors who wore the imperial purple, and swayed the mighty sceptre within its territorial boundaries, but as having standing on their borders two of the noblest gothic monuments of the middle ages, whilst every variety of rugged rock, and forests thick in stately elegance and sylvan grandeur; plains rich in fruitful vineyards to the water's edge, now perched like an eagle's eyrie among lofty crags, and anon gently sloping, are scattered along its limits as so many triumphs won by industrial energy amid this rugged fortress of nature. This river is regarded by every German with a kind of reverence and affectionate interest, their poetry calling it "King Rhine." Castles having a thousand legends connected with the traditional reminiscences of their history are met with as we are borne along its course.

"And there they stand as stands a lofty mind,
Worn, but unstooping to the baser crowd,
All tenantless save to the crannying wind,
Or holding dark communion with the crowd—
There was a day when they were young and proud,
Banners on high and battles passed below,
But they who fought are in a bloody shroud,
And those which waved are shredless dust are now,
And the bleak battlements shall bear no future blow."

BYRON.

Populous cities, flourishing towns and villages, beautiful roads and healthy mineral springs are not wanting to add more attraction and beauty to that river whose waters offer choice fish, as the vineyards on its banks offer the choicest wine; "a river which," according to Dr. Leibler, "in its course of nine hundred miles, affords six hundred and thirty miles of uninterrupted navigation from Basle to the sea, and enables the inhabitants of its banks to exchange the rich and various products of its shores for the choice articles indigenous to other lands; whose cities, illustrious for commerce, for the encouragement of science, and works of strength, furnish protection to Germany, and are also famous as the seats of Roman colonies and of ecclesiastical councils; and are associated with many of the most important events recorded in the history of mankind."

The source of the Rhine, which, in its course to the ocean of nearly four hundred leagues, is swelled by more than twelve thousand brooks and streamlets, issues in the centre of the Alps, on the frontiers of Italy. Three brooks, uniting at the village of Rheinan, in the Grisons, form this stream. The Fore Rhine issues on the eastern declivity of Mount St. Gothard, where from the lake Toma, which is enclosed by a wall of rocks of nine thousand feet, this rivulet breaks forth, and, being increased by the waters of some other brooks, near the village of Disentia, joins the Middle Rhine, another rivulet, issuing from a similar lake near Mount Lukinany. Fifteen leagues lower down, swelled by near sixty other brooks, both rivulets unite with the Hind Rhine, and thus united, form the river Rhine. The Hind Rhine, the most considerable of these three brooks, issues likewise in a ravine, which is some miles long, from among masses of rocks rising to the height of nine thousand feet out of an ice mountain, 5-6 thousand feet above the level of the sea.

Rafts on the Rhine.—Every traveller on the Rhine is sure to meet fast floating islands of timber going down the stream. It will doubtless be to him an object of interest to learn what this novel spectacle means, its composition, object, and destination. They are called rafts, and are the produce of the forests covering the hills and mountains watered by the Rhine and its tributaries,—the Necker, the Murg, Main, and Moselle. After being thrown down from their lofty heights, they are felled, and cast into some stream sufficient to float them. Thus is tree after tree bound together, and conveyed from stream to stream, until floating islands are formed which are bound into one great fabric and navigated to Dortrecht, where it is sold at Neundorf. As the mass floats along, it presents the appearance of a floating village, composed of eight or ten wooden houses on a large timber platform. Four or five hundred rowers and assistants are required to navigate the raft. These are directed by pilots and the proprietor, who lives on board the raft, in a house built expressly for him, superior in size, &c., to the others. The captain occupies an elevated position, which enables him to see and order all the steering, and movements. The mass or structure is directed by means of anchors and the immense oars placed fore and aft. The workpeople are accompanied by their wives and children, and knitting, sewing, &c., is carried on during the day. A very large quantity of provisions is consumed during the voyage; so much as 46,000 lbs. of bread, 31,000 lbs. of meat, 600 tuns of beer, eight or ten butts of wine, 1,500 lbs. of butter, 10,000 lbs. of cheese, being the average quantity. The timber is sold at the end of the voyage, and often produces as much as £25,000, and oftentimes £30,000. The duration of the voyage is generally from eight days to six weeks.

Steamers on the Rhine.—There are several Companies of Steamers navigating the Rhine.

vis. the Dusseldorf, which may be distinguished by having the funnels of their vessels marked with black and white stripes; the Cologne, distinguished by their black funnels; the Netherlands, by having the funnels painted half black and half white; the Cologne Company's boats do not go lower down the stream than Arnheim, passengers proceeding further are taken by the Netherlands Company's boats. The Steamers are divided into three cabins—the Pavilion, the Chief Cabin, and the Fore Cabin. Refreshments are provided on board at a moderate rate, fixed by a printed tariff. In going up or down the Rhine, in the river boats, if a person wishes, or has necessity, to travel with economy, he may take a second class ticket, and dine at the table d'hôte in the main cabin by paying the difference of fare between the two places for such time as he is at dinner; or, in other words, he will pay 3s. instead of 2s. for his dinner; they permit this when not too crowded. The quickest boats go in one day down the Rhine, from Mannheim to Cologne and Dusseldorf; Mayence to Dusseldorf; Dusseldorf to Rotterdam. Up the stream in one day from Cologne to Mannheim, in summer, and to Coblenz in winter; Coblenz to Mannheim. The following will be found the average time occupied on the voyage between

	MILES.	DOWN.	UP.
Rotterdam and Emmerich...	111	...8 hrs.	...12 hrs.
Emmerich and Dusseldorf...	73½	...8	...10
Dusseldorf and Cologne.....	31½	...3	...5
Cologne and Mayence.....	127	...9	...13½
Mayence and Mannheim.....	46½	...3½	...5½

In addition to the above stations, there are 38 small towns and 21 landing-places at which the steamers touch, some of them being the most picturesque points of the Rhine. At any of them, without exception, the tourist may land, and continue his journey when he pleases, up or down the river, by any of the company's steamers; he has only to take care to have his ticket marked by the conductor of the boat before leaving it. For landing or embarking at any of these points the charge is three halfpence.

Scenery of the Rhine.—The picturesque grandeur of the Rhine first shadows forth its beautiful brilliancy at the magnificent cluster of mountains called Siebengeberghe; and from this place, along the banks of the river as far as Mayence, scenes of surpassing loveliness and romantic beauty are constantly met with. The tourist hurriedly passing up and down the river in a steam-boat cannot enjoy the scenery of the Rhine—in fact they have not seen it. A mere trip up or down the Rhine, as English travellers generally take, can give no idea of the beauties of the river and its banks. If the tourist wishes to explore and appreciate the Rhine, he must not hurry but halt at the following places, which perhaps are the most appropriate ones that can be pointed out: Bonn, Coblenz, St. Goar, and Bingen, or Rudesheim. Below Bonn, in the direction of Cologne, or above Mayence, there is scarcely any object striking enough to merit admiration. We trace in the elevated Alps, in Switzerland, and near Mount St. Gothard, the sources of the Rhône, the Tessin, and the Rhine, or the king of the German—nay, of the West European rivers. The visitor, on ascending the Rhine, or on his arrival at Strasbourg, calls to his recollection how this stream has hastened its course through the lakes of Constance and Zellern; how it precipitated itself over the rocky ramparts at Schaffhausen; then, strengthened by the collected waters of Switzerland—the influx of 370 glaciers and upwards of 2,700 rivers of various sizes—it commences its majestic course near the ancient Roman city of Basse; how it expands between the upper Black Forest, amidst ranges of mountains encircling a valley of nearly thirty miles in breadth, through which it playfully winds, and receiving, besides other streams, the important Neckar and Main, until a rocky gate at Bingen seems to arrest its further career, but which it powerfully bursts, and strengthened by the Nahe and Moselle, overcomes a similar obstacle at Andernach, when it continues its victorious course towards the sea.

Railroad.—Cologne to Bonn, 18 English miles. Cologne terminus close to the St. Pantaleon's Gate. Distance by water, 22 English miles. Steamers occupy 3 hours up, and 1½ down.

COLOGNE.—(See Route 18 page 75.)—The railway, quitting Cologne, passes, at a short distance from the Rhine, through a flat country, rich in corn fields, and in proximity to the chain of the Vorgebirge chain of hills, &c. The first station met with is a small town, containing a population of 1,000.

KALSCHREUTH, a place of no importance, to the left. Leaving here we are quickly borne on

It is remarkable as being the refuge of bishop Engelbert, of Falkenberg, ex-bishop of Cologne in 1284, and of the Carlsberg, when expelled from France. or, Clement Augustus, laid in 1725 the stone of the magnificent castle of Bonn, finished by Maximilian Frederick, the property of the Prussian government. This castle lies on a beautiful promontory, near Bonn, recedes from the Rhine, as along in a picturesque manner two miles. The King of Prussia, in 1845, Queen Victoria in this castle during the festival. The site is excellent, and the view around very picturesque and grand; the stairs are beautiful platforms painted red and black. In the interior a garden goes hand in hand with domestic architecture.

Large fish ponds, shady groves, and a park which was formerly stocked with game enclosed; a linden walk takes us into a garden to the beautiful hunting seat of Falkenberg.

Leaving the last station we pass Siegburg, where are the remains of a Roman aqueduct, we arrive at Roisdorf station; there is an excellent mineral spring, whose waters are preferable to that of Godesberg, because its carbonic acid more firmly bound, and it may be sent to a greater distance. A view of the seven mountains beyond the city may be had here. Before reaching Bonn we pass the Kreuzberg (cross mountain), to which a fine view of the city leads. The village of Siegburg rises behind it. The cloister of Siegburg has been pulled down, but the beautiful church with its marble stairs and fine platform remains. The church contains some fine paintings, and in the crypt are mummies of the 17th century.

The terminus is close to the chestnut station leading to Poppelsdorf. Omnibuses ply between the station and steamers.

Trains leave Cologne for Coblenz every hour, performing the voyage upwards in three hours, and downwards in five. Mayence to Bonn, ten hours; Mayence to Frankfurt, ten hours and a quarter.

Mayenthorum, an old and venerable castle of the 14th century, rises at the margin of the river at the upper end of Cologne. In winter it serves to stave off the ice shocks from the city.

The water journey from Cologne to Bonn is very uninteresting, the banks along being quite flat, and the villages lying on them uninteresting.

As we near Bonn, to the right, the outline of the Siebengeberghe, or Seven Mountains, is seen to reflect itself in prismatic splendour, glittering and sparkling like the walls of some crystal palace. The Sieg discharges itself into the Rhine on the right bank. This river is famous for salmon fishing. It abounds in this fish, some of which weigh from 30 to 50 pounds.

To the right the castle of Siegburg rises on an eminence above the Sieg, three miles east of the Rhine. It is now a lunatic asylum.

To the right, also, is Schwarz-Rheindorf. There was formerly an establishment for noble ladies here in this place, known as the Benedictine Abbey. It contains to-day a curious architectural monument called the Steff Kirche, a church of two stories high, interesting to none save antiquarians.

Bonn.—Hotels :

Hotel Golden Star, decidedly one of the best on the Continent in every respect, and worthy our strongest recommendation.

The Grand Hotel Royal, overlooking the Rhine and facing the Park, is a good house, commanding a delightful view of the Seven Mountains.

Grand Hotel de Belle Vue, pleasantly situated on the banks of the Rhine, and good in every respect.

Population 30,600, including the students and garrison. A university town in Rhenish-Prussia of Roman origin, and formerly the residence of the Electors of Cologne. Its best edifices are the university, where Prince Albert was a student formerly the electoral palace, in which, besides lecture rooms, are a library of 150,000 volumes; the academical and Rhenish museums; a fine collection of Roman antiquities, including an altar to victory; and the aula, or academical hall, decorated with fresco paintings by the pupils, and under the direction of Cornelius. The subjects are, Philosophy, Medicine, Jurisprudence, and Theology, in the three former of which Linnaeus and Cuvier are prominent, and Wickliffe, Luther, Calvin, St. Jerome, Ignatius Loyola, and other fathers, both Protestant and Catholic.

The Münster presents a very fine external appearance, and was founded by the Empress Helena, mother of Constantine the Great in 320. It is built in the Byzantine style and is surmounted by five towers. It contains a bronze statue of the Empress. The tower and window of the nave form its most remarkable parts.

The house of Beethoven is pointed out in the Rheingrass. A bronze statue of him, erected in 1845, stands in the Münster Platz. Niebuhr, the historian, is buried in the church yard here, outside the town. English Church Service, on Sundays, in the Electoral Church.

The Museum of Natural Philosophy occupies the château of Poppelsdorf, approached by a beautiful walk, lined with a double avenue of chestnut trees. The collection is extensive and interesting; the various fossils, minerals, &c., illustrating the geology of the Rhine, Siebengeberghe, and Eifel. A set of fossil frogs in it deserves notice. The Botanic Garden is adjoining the château, and is rich, spacious, and beautifully located.

Dr. Farow's Institution of Orthopaedy and Medical Gymnastics, for the cure of spinal curvature and deformities of the chest and limbs, &c., offers to young ladies board and lodging in the establishment itself, where, in addition to suitable treatment, every arrangement is made for giving them a finished and accomplished education, especially in modern languages.

The beauties of the Rhine begin to unfold themselves at Bonn. From the opposite side of the river the view of the Seven Mountains is magnificently grand, whilst they can also be seen with much advantage from the Alte Zoll terrace, outside the Coblenz gate. The view obtained from the church on the top of Kreuzberg, $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Bonn, is beautiful in the extreme. The church was built in 1627, and is said to contain the stairs which led up to Pilate's Judgment Hall. They are in a chapel behind the high altar, and still bear, it is asserted, the stains of the drops of blood which fell from the Saviour's brow when lacerated by the crown of thorns! They are modelled from the Scala Santa staircase at Rome, and were built of Italian marble in 1726. Persons anxious to ascend them must do so on their knees. In a vault underneath the church are mummies. They are in earthenware coffins, and have cows and cassocks on. They have been buried at various times, from 1400 to 1713, and preserve the appearance of saved fish. Very many other pleasant excursions can be made from Bonn.

Bonn to Coblenz.—Leaving Bonn we see on the road side, three miles distant, the Hoch Kreuz (high cross) as it is called, a gothic monument, built by Wlfram of Julius, Archbishop of Co'ogne, in 1331-1349. About one mile distant from this to the right of the road, and opposite the Hoch Kreuz lies Friesdorf, situated at the foot of a pleasant chain of hills which stretches from Godesberg till they are lost deep in the Roor department. This place is worth notice, on the great mines opened in its vicinity opposite the Putsburg, as it is called, where the steamer stops for passengers to or from GODESBERG:—Inns: Blinzier's Hotel. De Bell-vua.

Is a small village near the Rhine, containing about 1,006 inhabitants. The Dratscher Brunn mineral spring and the baths are close by it, and are charged 10s. each. The castle keep, on the top of the hill, is an interesting object; it is approached by a serpentine path, and is a building of the 13th century, erected by the Archbishops of Cologne, on the site of a Roman fort. It was taken and blown up by the Bavarians in 1583. A magnificent view of the Rhine can be enjoyed from the Donjon keep, which is 100 feet high. From Godesberg excursions can be made to the volcanic hill of Rodesberg, the Seven Mountains. The shortest way to reach them is by crossing to Königswinter over the Rhine by ferry-boat. A very interesting and delightful excursion, of about one day's length may be made from the foot of the Drachenfels, by ascending the left bank of the Rhine to Rolandsbeck and then going down the river to Königswinter. A tour up the Ahr valley can also be profitably made and with the excursion to the Seven Mountains, a visit can be made to the celebrated Cistercian Abbey of Heisterbach. A fragment of the choir now only remains, a solitary monument of its ancient magnificence. The building was commenced in 1202, and was finished in 1233, being a beautiful specimen of the transition style from the round to the pointed system of architecture. In 1806, the greater part of the building was pulled down, and used up in the erection of the fortifications of Wesel. Leaving Godesberg we see at a short distance Ramersdorf and Pflanz-lorf, whilst a little further to the right Mehlem appears, having in its vicinity Roderberg, one of the most interesting extinct volcanoes of the ower Rhine. The Abbey of Siegburg is next seen rising into view, on the top of a hill. On the right are the villages of Dollendorf and Oberassel. The mountains now receding on both banks, the stream narrows, and we arrive at—KONIGSWINTER.—INN:

Hotel de Berlin, the best.
Hotel de l'Europe.

Where the valley of the Rhine, properly so called, which begins at Bingen, terminates. It is a small village of about sixteen hundred inhabitants, situated at the foot of the Drachenfels, the ascent of which from here can be made in about half an hour. Donkeys to ascend the mountain, cost 10g.; to Hiesterbach, 20s.gr. Boats to Nonenworth and back, 20s.gr.; to Bonn 15s.gr.

The Seven Mountains in the Siebengeberghe are seven on the right, and are a beautiful opening to the magnificent scenery of the Rhine. They are in towering majesty above its banks, and are given in number, as follows:—Stromberg, 1,053 feet; Niederstromberg, 1,066 feet; Oelberg, 1,456 feet; Wolkenberg, 1,057 feet; Drachenfels, 1,051 feet; and Lowenberg and Hemmerich. On the summit are the remains of an antique church and castle. Drachenfels, or the Dragon Rock, is the most remarkable, and derives double interest from having been the subject of Byron's muse. They rise from the bank of the river like a huge wall of rocks, on the south west declivity. In the lower half, you perceive the narrow, though high opening of a cave, in which tradition records, dwelt the dragon whom the horned Siegfried slew.

"The castled crag of Drachenfels
Frowns o'er the wide and winding Rhine,
Whose breast of waters broadly swells
Between the banks which bear the vine;
And hills all rich with blossom'd trees,
And fields which promise corn and wine;
And scatter'd cities crowning these,
Whose far white walls along them shine,
Have strew'd a scene, which I should see
With double joy, war't thou with me."

The summit of this mountain can be arrived in little less time than an hour from Königswinter. From its top a magnificent view may be enjoyed of the country and objects all round. In the ascent up we pass the quarry from which was taken the stone used in the erection of the Cologne Cathedral. Close to the top is a very good inn where the traveller will find comfortable accommodation, and enjoy a magnificent view of the sun-rise, should he stop over night and sleep there. From here the view extends down the river for about twenty miles, closed in by high and picturesque rocks, which impart a wild aspect to the scene, greatly relieved however by the villages and farm-houses filling up the foreground. The chief objects of attraction are the summits of the Seven Mountains, the Dungeon of Godesberg, the Volcanic Chain of the Eifel, and the Island of Nonenworth. On the summit of the Lowenberg are the ruins of the castle in which Melancthon and Bucer dwelt for a short period with the Archbishop Herman Von Weid. Close to Mehlem we find an extinct volcano, one of the most interesting on the Rhine, called the Rodesberg. Its crater is a quarter of a mile round, and one hundred feet deep. A good prospect of the Rhine may be had from the arch and turrets of the Castle of Rolandseck, approached through the Eliaesschlucht Gorge.

The view from Rolandseck is uncommonly beautiful. If you wish to come to the ruins, you first strike into the horse-road, which serpentine across the hill in a western direction. Then you come on the left to a footpath that takes you through an overgrown ravine to the summit. At the foot of the hill lies a hamlet with three hundred and fifty inhabitants. On the pleasant island of Nonenworth, there is a nunnery, built in 1673. It is embowered in trees and delightfully situated. It was taken under the protection of the Empress Josephine, who induced Napoleon to spare it, when the other religious houses on the Rhine were confiscated by the French. On the height of Honnet, there are some lead and copper mines, and a little further down is Remnesdorf; in the shade of the Seven Hills—the majestic Siebengeberghe. With these masses terminates the chain of mountains that stretches through Thuringia, Fulda, and Wetteravia up to the Rhine.

The road from Rolandseck to Remagen, is carried through a rock. It was begun by the Bavarians, continued by the French, and perfected by the Prussians. From the Siebengeberghe to Unkel, the Rhine forms a new basin, bordered on both banks by cheerful landscapes. A number of villages lie in the plain, and on the slopes of the vinehills Hlaeter Scheuern and Rheinbreitbach lie on the right, and Oberwinter, with seven hundred inhabitants, on the left. Rheinbreitbach contains twelve hundred inhabitants, and has two copperworks, one of which, St. John's, is the oldest on the Rhine.

UNKEL.—A small town with 600 or 700 inhabitants, is situated in a very picturesque country, to the left. Opposite the town, on the left bank, there arises a mountain that contains an inexhaustible store of large columns of basalt, under a layer of 30 or 40 feet of sandy marlground. They stand and lie in the quarry in different directions, resembling those of the Giant's Causeway in Ireland; their sides closing and spreading under ground as far as the middle of the Rhine, though some lie so deep that one can see many of their horizontal sections at low water, and others again generally appear above it. The most remarkable of these is the Unkelstein, a group that is evidently connected with the other columns stretching along the shore. There are dreadful traditions of the Unkelstein, similar to those of Scylla and Charybdis, current among the people, especially the shippers. The basalt forms a first-rate material for roads, and as such is largely quarried. A landslide in it in 1846 raised the road forty feet above its former level. We next see, to the left, the woody heights of APOLLINARISBERG, a cheerful mount, with its former provost's mansion, which belonged to the abbey of Siegburg. From its height, which is uncommonly interesting, a delightful view of the Rhine may be enjoyed. It is called after St. Apollinaris, whose head is preserved in the ancient Gothic church, built from the designs of Zwirner, the restorer of the dome of Cologne. Frescoes decorate it internally, and circular windows, except in the choir, light it up. It contains some of the best works of the German school of fresco painting, by Deger, A. Müller, and Ittenbach. From the Apollinarisberg a splendid view of the seven mountains can be enjoyed. At the bottom of the hill we see

REMAGEN.—Inns:
König von Freussen.
Fremdescher Hof.

A small town, the Rigomagum of the Romans, with a population of 1367 inhabitants. It lies opposite the high road from Bonn to Coblenz. When, in 1768, the beautiful road between the two latter mentioned places was being made, a great number of antique monuments were found here and about. They chiefly consisted of Roman milestones, coins, columns with inscriptions, sarcophagi, denoting pretty clearly that the Emperor Marcus Aurelius and Lucius had already founded a road here. The chief object of interest to the traveller is the romanesque gateway. It is close to the church, and has sculptured on it the signs of the zodiac. To the right, a little beyond Remagen, are seen the basaltic precipices called the Kerpeler Lei, which, are 700 feet high, and almost inaccessible, and have yet, by the energy and skill of human industry been converted into rich vineyards. The vines are here, as in other similar steep vineyards, (where one would almost suppose the mountain goat and her kids could alone be the vinedressers,) planted in baskets filled with mould and inserted in the crevices of the rock. The costly ley wine, the principal white wine of these parts, grows on the southern or eastern declivity of this steep. Proceeding past Ockenfels on the right, the first turn of the river brings us in sight of Linz, on the opposite shore.

LINZ.—Inns:
Nassauhof.
Rheinischer Hof,

A small industrious town, with a population of 2250. It is partly fortified and belonged formerly to the Electorate of Cologne. In 1365, the castle near the Rhine-gate was built by Archbishop Engelbert III., in order to secure the Rhine toll and protect the town against the invasions of the citizens of Andernach. The castle, as well as the town-walls, are built of basalt, and the streets are paved with the same material. Not far from Linz is Leubsdorf, with its white steeple peeping forth from the right of the rock opposite the Aar, which issues into the Rhine, opposite Linz, immediately below Simsig. Passing its mouth, we see up the Aar valley, the conical top of the Landakrone. This little mountain stream flows through a narrow, deep, and crooked valley 12 leagues long, producing an excellent red wine called Aarbluchart. Its stream is very rapid and sometimes overflows its banks spreading desolation around.

SINZIG.—(Inn : Sten Krone.) A small town, 1½ miles from the Rhine, by whose waters its walls might have been formerly washed. Its population is sixteen hundred. It is the ancient sentricum, a Roman castle, probably founded by one of Augustus' generals, called Sentis. According to tradition, the memorable battle between Constantine and Maxentius, which decided the victory of Christianity over paganism was fought here. Its parish church is an object of interest. The altar-piece in it represents Constantine beholding the cross in the sky. It is a beautiful gothic edifice, built in the form of a cross. A well-preserved painting over the side door on the right deserves notice. There are a few German paintings on the side of the high altar scarcely deserving notice. To the right we see the castle of Argenfels. A short distance beyond the village of Honningen we see on the left, the village of Niederbreisig, a pretty place, with about 1,220 inhabitants, and from there, up from the river, is Oberbreisig, where our notice is claimed by an ancient church and some inscriptions. In the distant background, contiguous to Eifel, we see Olbreuck and the castle of Landskron on the Aar. Proceeding to Brohl, we see on the left, the castle of Rheiteck, from which the prospect is really grand. The ruins are the property of Professor Bethman-Holweg, of Bonn, who has restored them to their pristine shape at considerable and lavish expense. Upwards you behold Andernach and Leudesdorf, and opposite, blooming fields greet your eye, whilst downwards, the stream is rolling its waves in delightful ecstacy.

BROHL.—(I. Hotel Nonns.) is a small village at the mouth of the stream and valley of the same name. It extends partly at the declivity of a mount, and is mostly hid in different directions by two small hills. Upon one of these eminences there lies an ancient castle. The beautiful view, the abundance of springs, the evergreen vegetation, and the natural loveliness so interesting to a philosopher, presents one of the most delightful attractions on the banks of the Rhine. All around Brohl has the character of volcanic alluvial soil, and you frequently find in it a mixture of pumice stone, removed from its place by volcanic eruption. Brohl possesses a paper mill, together with several other mills, which are driven by the waters of the stream Brohl-bach, and are employed in grinding tuff-stone into trass or cement. It resembles Roman cement and the puzzolona of Naples, and was made use of by the ancients in the building of their coffins, which were called sarcophagi, or flesh consumers, from the wonderful property possessed by this stone of absorbing the moisture of the dead.

From here an excursion can be made to the lake of Laach. This lake and its environs are extremely remarkable. Its surface is 8,694 feet long, 7,890 feet broad, and 214 feet deep. It is said to have 3,000 sources. The water is of a blueish colour, is very cold, and of a nauseous taste, throwing out, when agitated, a sand attracted by the magnet. The lake freezes rarely and contains no fish but pike, tench, and perch. The excursion is made by carriage, and will occupy a long day. On the opposite shore, on a huge rugged rock, is the ivy clad ruin of the castle of Hammerstein, remarkable as being the refuge of the Emperor Henry V. when persecuted by his son. The small old church within it is interesting.

The retrospect from Brohl to Andernach is charming in the extreme. Massive rocks, with the picturesque ruins of the castle of Hammerstein, woody foregrounds, and flourishing valleys, form some of the most charming landscapes. To the left we see NAMEDY, situated romantically within the shades of the forest. Here the Rhine forms a small harbour where formerly the smaller rafts were united into larger ones. As we proceed on from here we see Breysich and Honningen in the foreground of the picture through which the river pursues its serpentine course. Passing the islet on the right, the prospect opens between two rows of mountains, and a cheerful plain spreads itself out on our left, where Leudesdorf is ranged along the river, sheltered by high walls of rocks planted with vines. We arrive at ANDERNACH, an ancient town, founded by the Romans, and, in the middle ages, a free city of the empire. Enclosed within lofty old walls, it contrasts strikingly with Newwied, further on, which lies quite open. It was the frontier fortress of the Romans, the head quarters of a præfectus militum, and the last Roman station of the army of the Upper Rhine. It contains about 3,000 inhabitants, and is at present famous for two products—appear nowhere else on the Rhine, or in any European country in such quantity as in Holland. These products are furnished by those remarkable quarries of mill stone and trass which the geologist will not pass by unnoticed. It is the peculiar quality of this volcanic production that it, if mixed with a proper quantity of lime, forms a mortar that resists water, or rather, is turned by it into durable stone. The mill stones of this place are also a volcanic product, and are spoken of as the "Rhenish mill stones" by the Roman authors. A great many of them have been found among the Roman ruins in England. They are also exported to this country, Russia, the East and West Indies, and to other countries of the world. The curiosities of Andernach are, the gate towards Coblenz, the round watch tower, the ancient palace of the Frank kings, close to a round tower, evidently Roman, and an interesting specimen of the architecture of the middle ages.

The Church is a fine old structure of the Carolingian age, and in the neighbouring Kirchberg there are Roman sepulchres. In the neighbourhood are several rich mineral springs. Those of Toenesteln and Heilbrun, near the lake of Laach, about two miles to the right of Andernach, have considerable reputation. Those of Heilbrun are white, like milk. A short distance from here, on the right of the road, on the spot where formerly stood the Abbey of St. Thomas, burnt by the French in 1794, there is an extensive tannery and lunatic asylum, part of the restored ruins of the abbey. Beyond Andernach the mountains again approach the river, forming a magnificent defile, and having, at the water's edge, on the right, the ruined castle of Friedrichstein, or the Teufelshaus—i. e., the Devil's House, so called by the serfs forced to build it, the building of which was begun in the 17th century, but never finished. On the same side lies the village of Irlich, connected by an avenue of poplars with the town of Neuweid. It is an industrious little place, where the Neld falls into the Rhine. Opposite to it lies the mouth of the Netze, which in its course of ten leagues, waters one of the most fertile valleys on the Rhine.

NEUWEID.—Inns :

Hotel du Rhin.

Anker.

Wilder Mann.

Cæsar's Hotel.

An agreeably ranged and clean town, with a population of 5,300. It is the capital of the principality of Weid, now joined to Prussia, and is located in a charming plain, environed as it were by a wreath of eminences. It was founded not much more than a century back by Prince Frederick William. It has broad streets, cheerful houses, and is a pattern of activity and industry. The Count Alexander raised the prosperity of the town by giving perfect freedom and toleration in civil and religious matters to all who came to settle there, by assisting them with large sums of money, and keeping up a splendid court. Lutherans, Roman Catholics, in short, people of all persuasions flocked to this place where the fostering genius of toleration built herself a temple, where men, though kneeling at different altars, and worshipping by different rites, yet regarded the book of peace and the legacy of love not as a bone of contention, nor Christianity as the touchstone of uncharitableness.

The Prince's Palace overlooks the river. In one of its side buildings is a very important collection of Roman antiquities, chiefly gathered from the buried city of Victoria, near Niederbiber, two miles to the north of the town. In the collection are several Tutelar genii; one of bronze, whose inscription informs us that it had been erected by fourteen veterans (their names are inscribed on the basis), and other military persons, on the 23rd of September, 246 A.D. Besides these, there is silver in plate, bronze, sandstone and pipe clay, alabaster and fine volutes, shields, arms, helmets, iron tools, potter's ware of all forms and materials, and a collection of coins, female ornaments, &c. None of the coins date later than 375 A.D., which all but precisely settles the epoch of the destruction of Victoria, the ruins of which are now covered up, and the green corn of spring again waves in serial beauty, over the bruised and broken remnants of its ancient grandeur. The palace garden of Neuweid, which is accessible to every one, is particularly deserving the tourist's notice. A small hill in it, the Sonnenberg, presents a most beautiful prospect of the Rhine, and of Andernach. At the extremity of the garden you see before you, through the trellis gate, the beautiful avenue of poplars that leads to the village of Irilich. In the building called the Pheasant's Warren, to which strangers are freely admitted, a rich and remarkable collection of natural objects may be seen, which the celebrated naturalist, Prince Maximilian, of Neuweid, sent during his travels in Brazil and North America. This collection contains 313 Mammalia and 1,700 stuffed birds; there are also in it many classes of the Brazilian animal reign.

The flying bridge over the Rhine at Neuweid greatly facilitates its commerce.

The colony of Moravian Brothers, occupying a distinct quarter of the town will interest; their church, schools, and workshops, being worth seeing.

A pleasant excursion can be made to Monrepos, with its park and gardens. It is situated six miles N.N.E. from Neuweid, and affords beautiful prospects. A pleasant road over meadow grounds leads us to the ironworks of Rasselstein, and thence to the pleasure park of Nothhausen, much frequented by visitors from Coblenz and other places. The palace or château is a plain building of but one story. Here the most beautiful landscapes appear within a circumference of about thirty leagues. Behind the château is a grove partitioned out into seven shady and delightful walks; at the end of one of them is a lone and poetical valley, terminating at the entrance to a beautiful beech forest.

We next see to the left, Weissenthurm, or the White Tower. It is a village possessing a church decorated with modern frescos, and deriving its name from the ancient watch tower built by the Elector of Treves. At this spot Cæsar crossed the Rhine, seventeen centuries before, and constructed his famous bridge, described in his Commentaries de Gaia. The French also, in 1797, crossed the river at this spot under General Hoche, by throwing a bridge across. They met with severe opposition from the Austrians on the occasion. To the right, on an eminence, we see the obelisk erected to the memory of the French General. It bears the following inscription:—"The army of the Sambre and Meuse, to its commander, General Hoche." This was the same general who was destined to command the expedition into Ireland. The bed of the old lake here widens into an extensive and well cultivated plain, over which are scattered villas with pleasure and fruit gardens around them; and the road leaves the river and is lost sight of altogether until we near Coblenz. Not far from here, and close to the bank, on the right is ENGERS, with a castle built in the ancient French style, and a population of 860. Scarcely a pistol-shot distance from it is the buttress of a Roman bridge of cement, said to have been built 38 years B.C. by Virginus Agrippa. The castle and the greenhouse are worth notice, particularly the beautiful ceiling painted by Zick.

MULHOFEN.—A small village to the right, at the mouth of the river Sayn. A road leading from Engers, three miles distant, and from Coblenz eight miles distant, to the village and château of Sayn, wends up the valley from here. At the rear of the village of Bendorf, close by, are the cannon foundry and ironworks, as large as any of the great ironworks of England. The Prämonstrat Abbey at Sayn, founded in 1202, will interest deeply. Its church is built in the transition style. At the extreme point of the valley is the castle of the Counts of Isenburg. The valley is certainly a delightful one, containing summer-houses, gardens, and villas. It forms a favourite object of summer visits to the people of Coblenz. The venerable and noble Abbey of Rommersdorf is seen on the slope of a hill north of the valley, about two miles north of Sayn, and the same distance north-east of Engers. To the right are seen the walls of the Castle of Ehrenbreitstein. Over against the ruins of the ancient Castle of Sayn, lies Mount Frederick, also called Renneberg, where beautiful plantations may be seen and magnificent views enjoyed. To it an agreeable excursion may be made from Bendorf, situated within a small distance from the right bank of the river; with its ironworks it is surrounded with ferruginous eminences which afford some beautiful prospects. From these eminences you see the Rhine far below Coblenz issuing from among the mountains and forming an union with the Moselle, near that town. Approaching closer to Coblenz, we see on our left NEUNDORF, the vegetable market of Coblenz. On the right the cottages of the vine-dressers from Urbar range along the bank of the river, where an excellent reddish wine is grown. The charming island of Niederwerth is next passed. It has a handsome church and 762 inhabitants. On the left bank we now behold the Wallersheim, with its cloister, and on the right, on the slope of a mount, the late nunnery of Besselch.

To the left, near Kesselheim, are the remains of the château of Schönbornlust, the residence of the Bourbon princes during their exile from France at the French Revolution. Near the confluence of the Moselle and Rhine, to the left, is the monument to General Marceau, who fell on the field of Altenkirchen, in endeavouring to check the retreat of Jourdan. Before reaching Coblenz the valley widens considerably, the mountains of the Hundsrück on the left side terminate, and those of the Eifel are still distant from the bank of the river, the eminences of Westerwald, or the New Forest also recede a little on the right hand, and thus the tourist is environed with a grand natural panorama. At Coblenz the Moselle and Rhine unite, and the road passing under the works of the Emperor Francis, sometimes called Fort Marceau, crosses the former stream by a stone bridge and enters Coblenz. Extending along the banks we see the immense palace of the Electors of Treves, as the steamer reaches her berth. Should our entry take place at the close of the day, the silvery stream gets tinged with the last crimson clouds of evening, and the numerous old towers and turrets of Coblenz, sleeping in the shade, look well in the dusky twilight, and impart to the scene an aspect of sombre beauty.

Coblenz.—Hotels:—

Hotel du Geant, one of the best on the Rhine. Landlord, Mr. Schurtz.

Hotel de Belle Vue—first-rate, and highly recommended. The Hotel des Trois Suisses has recently been added to this house. Landlord, Mr. Hoche.

Coblenz, the "Confluences" of the Romans, is a strongly fortified town on the right bank of the Rhine, and left of the Moselle; capital of Rhenish Prussia, with a population of 28,000, including 4,000 military. It occupies a large triangle, formed by the influx of the Moselle into the Rhine. Coblenz is adorned by many fine buildings, squares, and avenues of trees. The old castle, near the Moselle bridge, possesses historical interest, having been the sojourn of several emperors.

The Church of St. Castor, at the very confluence of the two rivers, and distinguished by its four towers, dates from 836, is worth a visit, and is remarkable for its great antiquity. It was built chiefly at the expense of Louis the First, in whose presence it was consecrated in 803. There met the grandsons of Charlemagne, to divide amongst them his mighty empire into Germany, France, and Italy. On the left of the chancel stands the beautiful tomb of Cuno of Falkenstein, archbishop of Treves, with a painting of the Crucifixion, attributed to the old German master, William of Cologne. Here, also, Edward III. of England, was installed Vicar of the Empire, by Lewis of Bavaria.

The cellars under the grammar school, formerly a Jesuit's convent, are worth visiting from their great extent, containing about 300 vats, or 400,000 bottles of Rhine and Moselle wines, and are the property of Messrs. Deinhard and Jordan, bankers and wine merchants. From the vicinity of this town to the wine districts it forms the great dépôt for the export of their produce, as also of the seltzer waters of Nassau, and the various volcanic productions of the neighbourhood.

The Palace, extending its long and handsome façade above the bridge of boats, with its principal front to the great square, where the troops drill and band play, between 12 and 1 o'clock each day.

The new Palace of Justice, containing the Law Courts.

The Casino, is a handsome building, having connected with it good reading-rooms, ball-rooms, and gardens, and is worth visiting.

The Church of England service is performed in the Palace Chapel twice each Sunday.

The fortifications of Coblenz are of vast extent; of these Ehrenbreitstein is the most remarkable, having cost it is said, 5,000,000 dollars. The works were completed after being about twenty years in process of erection. The ramparts have no casements only a sidewalk carried up along the moat. Covered towers, that rise up from the deep to the glacis, and with their batteries, from the projecting angles, command the whole length of the moat. The bastions of the Moselle bridge-gate, the Loehr gate, and the Muns gate appear to be stronger than the rest. Forts Alexander and Constantine, above the town, command the road to Mayence, and that over the Hundsrück. This fortress also commands the Rhine and Moselle, and is built on the Carmusian mount. The prospect enjoyed from the height is most beautiful. All the works of the fortifications are environed by a pleasant wood. A railroad of cast iron, with stone stairs in the centre, takes you up westward, almost perpendicularly to the top. From Ehrenbreitstein, the most charming prospect shadows itself forth. In the foreground, Coblenz borders the stream, limited by two islands, each of which formerly had a cloister. Behind the town, rising on high, are the threatening fortifications of the Carthusian mount. In the plain there are more than 30 villages visible, and each point of view presents a new and enchanting landscape. Along the foot of the mount and losing itself in the turning of the valley, near a pleasant mineral spring that issues from a hill, extends the little village of Muehlheim, 2,500 inhabitants, commonly called the Valley of Ehrenbreitstein. The objects worth notice in the old town, are, besides the church of St. Castor, already mentioned, the monument in front of this church, erected by the French in 1812. It consists of a mountain, bearing an inscription, commemorative of the invasion of Russia by the French: to which was added, by Gerard St. Priest, the Russian commander, on his way to Paris, when pursuing the discomfited army of Napoleon, the following, "seen and approved of by us, the Russian commander of the town of Coblenz;" the Liebfrauen Kirche, a curious building erected in 1259; the Protestant church, remarkable for its painted glass windows, similar to those in the Jerusalem chamber at Westminster; the Moselle bridge, built in 1344, and commanding an agreeable view of the river and the venerable old buildings along the quay, and the ancient Town Hall, originally the castle of the electors of Treves, now a Japan manufactory; the Stainhuis, in which resided the late Prince Metternich, and the Hospital.

In the environs of Coblenz are Moselweis, a pretty village, much resorted to for recreation; Metternich, eight miles distant, at the foot of the Krümmelberg. Here are the sources which supply Coblenz with water by pipes which pass over the bridge of the Moselle. This river is navigable to a great distance beyond Treves; during the whole of its course from that city to its mouth, 147 miles, it is closed in by mountains, which form a continued series of the most diversified landscapes, in consequence of the sinuosities of the stream. German steamers ply between Coblenz and Treves, from which place to Metz is navigated by a French company. Besides the beautiful valley of the Moselle itself, which contains some of the most picturesque river scenery in Germany, many of the adjacent valleys are well worth a visit.

N

Coblenz being one of those points on the Rhine from whence so many interesting excursions may be made, it is well, if possible, to make it a halting place for some days. Among the places most worth visiting are the following:—the Pfaffendorfer Höhe, a hill on the same side with Ehrenbreitstein, and commanding almost as fine a view; the hill of the Chartreuse; the castle of Stolzenfels, three miles up, on the right bank of the Rhine—vehicles there and back one dollar; to the top of the Kuhkopf, the highest hill near the town; Lahnstein, on the left bank; Sayn and the abbey of Rommersdorf; abbey and lake of Laach; castle of Elz; Newwied and Marksburg; more distant, Ems and Nassau. The neighbouring forests abound in game.

Conveyances.—Eilwagen to Ems, Kreuznach, Treves, and Wiesbaden. Steamers several times daily to Biebrich, Mayence, and Mannheim; as also to Bonn, Cologne, Düsseldorf, and Rotterdam. Steamers ascend the Moselle as far as Treves and Metz.

At Coblenz the direct road to the Brunen of Nassau leaves the Rhine. A great part of it is uninteresting, whilst some of the finest scenery of the Rhine lies between Coblenz and Bingen; and hence, to those wishing to explore its beauties, the post-road by the left bank as far as Bingen, where it crosses the river Rheingau and turns off to Wiesbaden, is preferable. In this case an excursion to Ems ought to be made, and to the Castle of Nassau, eight miles further. The cost of a carriage to Ems is 4½ dollars.

The tour of the MOSELLE to Treves can be made from Coblenz, returning on the river by steamer; or, if not all the way to Treves, a two days excursion might be made to Münster-Malfield, the Castle of Elz, and the village of Alf—situated on the Moselle, at a point where the most beautiful scenery exists—and to the Baths of Bertrich.

A good day's excursion can be made by carriage, from Coblenz, by the Treves post-road.

through Metternich to Lonnig, to Münster-Maisfeld, to the hill above Els, where we leave the carriage going to Gondorf, crossing the Moselle by a ferry to Niederfell, where refreshment is taken. Els can be seen, a walk made to Moselkern or to Halsenport, where a boat takes us down the river to Gondorf-Cobern, where we recross the river, meet our carriage, and return to Coblenz by the right bank on a new and bad carriage road.

Omnibuses to Ems several times a day, and cabs are much cheaper when hired at the Hotel.

ROUTE 22.

Coblenz to Mayence.

Distance by the post road along the left bank of the Rhine, 56 English miles. Conveyances: Steamers five or six times daily, performing the voyage up in 8 hours, and down in 5 hours. Schnellpost daily to Mayence in 9 hours, and to Kreuznach, by Bingen, in 7½ hours.

Above Coblenz the long ridges of the mountains begin to hem in the Rhine, which extends as far as Bingen, flowing through a contracted gorge. An unrivalled scenery here presents itself to the eye. The broken fragments of feudal castles, the mouldering ruins of their dismantled battlements, with the walled towns and venerable buildings, form the most prominent features in the scene, which is doubly heightened by the historical associations connected with each and every object that bursts upon the astonished vision. Leaving Coblenz we pass Forts Alexander and Constantine on the left, and on the right banks see the fortified fort which surmounts the heights of Pfaffendorf, situated above a village of the same name. Proceeding on, we pass Horebheim, which is the last Prussian village, and see opposite to it the island of Oberwerth, on which is built the country house of Count Pfaffenhofen. Three miles or so above Coblenz we behold one of the most interesting castles on the Rhine, beautiful in its picturesque outline and commanding position, it may justly be styled the Proud Rock. It is called the castle of Stolzenfels, and was built by one of the archbishops of Treves. The wife of the Emperor Frederick II., and sister of Henry III., king of England, was received and lodged in this castle in 1235. A very good carriage road leads up to it, and about it there are very pretty plantations and shrubberies; it will well repay a visit. Its principal objects of attraction are the Ritteraal, an apartment painted with frescoes, by Schickel representing the knightly virtues, by scenes from history, i.e.,—the death of the blind king, John of Bohemia, at the battle of Crecy—Courage: Herman von Stebenetichen saving the Empress Barbarossa by exposing himself to the Greek assassins, having first forced the emperor to his Fidelity: The Emperor Frederick II. rescues his bride, Isabella Plantagenet, sister to Henry III. Love. Music: Philip of Swabia with his wife and minstrels sailing down the Rhine. Justice: Rodolph of Hapsburgh establishes general peace. Perseverance, represented by Godfrey of Bouillon hanging up his arms in the church of the Holy Sepulchre. Stra. Geron, George, Maurice, and Reinhold are painted in the window. In another room there is an armoury, and in it are to be seen the armour of Tilly, Blücher, Napoleon, Murat, &c. Queen Victoria, accompanied by the King of Prussia, visited this castle in 1845. From here to Mayence, both banks of the Lahn, and the right bank of the Rhine belong to Nassau. It is the most beautifully situated of all the Rhine castles, commanding a prospect up the river as far as the valley of the Drinkholder spring, with Rhense, Oberlahnstein and Marksburg included. Opposite is the lovely valley of the Lahn, and the confluence of that river with the Rhine; while down the stream the view embraces Coblenz, with its fortifications, and the mountains of Andernach in the distance.

There is a ferry from Stolzenfels to Lahnstein, and another over the mouth of the Lahn; a carriage road leads to Ems, up the left bank of this river.

We approach the mouth of the Lahn, which issues slowly from a chasm navigable for small vessels as high up as Weilbery. At this spot the Russians crossed the Rhine in 1814. The Lahn carries a great number of minerals with it into the Rhine, and above its mouth, to the right, on the top of a rock, is the castle of Lahneck, like a mourning Nalad weeping as it were over its ruined grandeur. There is Oberlahnstein, an old walled town, with a conspicuous red building at the edge of the Rhine, once a castle of the electors of Mayence; near it is a small white

VIEWS ON THE RHINE.

apel among trees, where, in 1400, the deposition of the emperor Wenceslaus, was pronounced, and the election of Rupert in his place elected by the electors. Below the mouth of this river is the church of St. John, a venerable ruin. Its choir and columns are worth inspection. At a short distance from it, on the right hand bank of the Lahn, is the village of Nieder-Lahnstein, from whence we cross to Stolsenfels by ferry. RHENSE (Inn : Zum Königstuhl), a very antique town, scarcely altered since the middle ages. It has many timber houses, and still retains a mediæval German aspect. Near it is the Königstuhl (King's seat), an open vaulted hall, with seven stone seats for the seven electors, who used to meet in it to discuss affairs of state. In this little town many treaties of peace were made and signed; emperors were dethroned, and empires consolidated by the strength and alliance of centuries, withered into clay, whilst dynasties, topped up by the traditions of ages, were set aside and others substituted in their place. A beautiful view is enjoyed from the terrace and windows of the castle. The Rhine here assumes a very broad expanse. Seated in a valley and, as it were, solemnly reposing in the shade, we see BRÄUBACH (Inn : Zur Philipsburg) a little town to the right, located at the base of a lofty rock on which stands the strong and feudal fortress—the castle of Marksburg, described below. It is worth a visit; and a magnificent view can be enjoyed from the summit of the donjon keep. The castle is distant about seven miles from Ems, and is approached by a very passable road. Outside the town is a beautiful mineral spring of delicious water. Persons desirous of visiting Marksburg from the left bank of the Rhine, must cross the river at Nierderspay, where there is a ferry. In the romantic valley surrounding Bräubach there are copper and silver mines. On the top of a mass of rock appears MARKSBURG.—A fortress of the middle ages, in perfect preservation, being the only one of the Rhine castles which has escaped destruction. It is situated on a lofty rock, was used as a state prison, but recently as an infirmary, or rather it was garrisoned by invalids. It is well worth visiting, as a remarkable specimen of those terrible strongholds were "power dwelt amidst her sessions;" narrow and mysterious passages, dungeons cut in the living rock, are here to be seen; among these is one called the Hundloch (dog hole), into which prisoners were let down by a windlass, and another the horribel Folterkammer (chamber of torture). A cell is pointed out as the one in which the emperor Henry IV. was confined. After viewing these dismal records of human cruelty, the tourist may ascend the donjon keep and take a view of the surrounding scenery, which is picturesque in the extreme. The appearance of the country on the right now becomes wilder and more romantic. A long sandbank stretches across the bed of the river, and the Rhine rolls its waves past Peterspay. Middlespay and Noberspay seen on the left. The Rhine here takes one of its largest curves, but is soon repelled again into its proper channel by the mount of Boppard. The mountains now appear less picturesque, they being generally flattened or rounded. The charming castle of Leibeck rises majestically above Osterspay, which may be called a neat orchard. More to the right, about two-and-a-half miles beyond Bräubach, is the Dinkholder Brunnen, a famous mineral spring.

Boppard.—Hotels :

Hotel du Rhin.

Post.

An ancient walled town, population 4,000. This is a gloomy but interesting place, of Roman origin, having been one of the 50 castles of Drusus on the Rhine. In it are the remains of the palace of the Frankish kings, and the ruins of a fine chapel. Behind the town is the ancient nunnery of Marlenbergh, now an establishment for the water-cure. The walls of the Roman castrum, a quadrangle of strong masonry, still exist in the heart of the town. The situation of Boppard is remarkably beautiful. The streets of Boppard are very narrow and dark, but possess many attractions for the architect and antiquary, many of the buildings presenting great peculiarities of architecture.

Approaching Salsig on the left, the mountains recede a little from the banks, and give place to corn fields and meadows. We next see the mouldering battlements and ruined towers of Sternberg and Liebenstein opposite, to the right of Salsig, seated on a lofty rock, clothed with vines. The traditions connected with their history make them interesting. They are called the brothers, from the fact of two brothers having resided in them. The brothers fell in love with the one lady, and became foes, and fell by each other's sword. These ruins have a beautiful appearance if you look on them from the left bank of the Rhine. A picturesque valley in which Bornholm lies, formerly a cloister of Capuchins, together with some houses winding along the eminences, on whose summits you behold those ruins. A walk, shaded by walnut-trees, takes you from the cloister to the village of Kamp. You now behold Salsig, an agreeable village, with large plantations of cherry-trees, and a population of 6,112 inhabitants. Near Hirsenech the river takes an easterly turn. On the right bank you see the village of Kester, with its demolished parish church. Opposite to it rises a high wall of rocks, at its foot girded with vineyards, and on its summit crowned with wood. You next behold Erenthal, a village where there is an abundance of silver, lead, and copper mines. In the whole district from Wesel to below Hirsenech, there are basalt, slate, lime, marble, and other minerals. A beautiful scenery now expands itself before the voyager: Weimich, with its gothic tower and picturesque environs now appear, and behind it the old walls of the castle of Thurnberg, built by Kuno V. Falkenstein, archbishop of Treves, in 1363, peer down upon you. It is also called the mouse, to distinguish it from a castle called the cat, which is above St. Gerhauser. The scenery now is rich in the extreme, fertile gardens and luxuriant meadow-ground are spread out from Weimich to the very bank of the Rhine. On the right we see St. Goar and Rheinfels, whilst below Weimich the river makes a great curve towards the north forming a fine bay, surrounded by eminences. To the left, close above the town of St. Goar we see the most extensive ruin on the Rhine, namely, the fortress of Rheinfels. This immense stronghold was built in 1245 by a count of Katzenelnbogen, to levy duties on the passing merchandise; but, pushing his extortions too far, he was besieged by the people of the adjacent towns, who, for fifteen months, endeavoured to reduce the castle, but without success: it fell afterwards, however, with most of the other robber-dens, before the confederacy of the German and Rhine towns. It became afterwards, in the hands of the Landgrave of Hesse, a modern fortress, which baffled the French in 1692, but was taken and blown up by them in 1794. An inn has been built in the midst of the ruins, from whence is a magnificent view. The country now changes its aspect as if by magic; from the gloomy rocky gulf, you enter a cheerful and pleasant valley, and see all round you eminences covered with leaf-wood, or planted with vines and gardens, beautifully along the banks of the river, expanding itself like a sleeping serpent.

St. Goar, with a population of 1,500 inhabitants. A cheerful little town, and very desirable as a sojourn, for the purpose of making excursions in the vicinity, as it lies in the midst of some of the finest of the Rhine scenery, and is therefore well placed for a few days' halt. This town is also famous for its salmon fishery. Near it is a dangerous rapid called the Bank, and below this the whirlpool Gewirk. A very fine view is to be had from the heights above St. Goar, rising directly in the face of the Lurleberg. It is approached by a footpath leading out of the high-road to Brage, shortly before coming to the Trumpeter's grotto.

The Protestant Church, near the centre of the town, is worth a visit; it is erected over the crypt of the old church of St. Goar, built in 1645. In the Roman Catholic Church of St. Goar, there is a rude image of that hermit, who, it is said, to prove his holiness, hung up his cloak on a sun-beam. To the right, some delightful excursions and views may be had from the Nassau bank of the Rhine, and boats are always at hand to bring visitors over the river. Opposite St. Goar is

St. Gorhausen, 800 inhabitants, still partly surrounded with its old walls. Here begins the Forstbach, or Swiss Valley, celebrated for its beauty, being traversed by a clear stream, forming numerous cascades, between precipitous masses of rock. At the entrance of this vale stands the castle of the Cat, a very picturesque object, built in 1393, by John III., Count of Katzenelnbogen; an excellent red wine is grown here on the Felsenberg, equal in richness to that of Assmannshausen. On the right of St. Gorhausen we see the demolished castle of Rheinfels. In this part there are charming views. Those wishing to ascend the Lurleberg should embark below Doerschild.

On the same side, but a little above St. Erbausen, the black perpendicular precipice of Lurleiberg rises abruptly from the water's edge, opposite to which on the road side, is a cottage, in which is stationed a man who, with a signal or by firing a pistol, awakens the echo of Lurleiberg, which is said to repeat sounds fifteen times. Above this, in midchannel, and visible above low water, are the rocks called the Seven Sisters, the subject of a legend.

Oberwessel.—Inns:

heimscher Hof.

erischen Hof.

The Vesalia of the Romans. A small town of 1000 inhabitants; very interesting to visit, and highly situated. The church of Our Lady Oberwessel is considered a model of the Gothic style; in St. Martin's is a "Descent from the Cross," by Diepenbroek. The picturesque appearance of the town is much increased by its turreted walls and the lofty round tower called the Ox Tower, on the water side. The village of Engehölle is all worth a visit. Above this place the Rhine forms a lake, which appears to be entirely locked up by rocks. The view is sublimely grand, and magnificently striking. Beyond the lake the river makes a curve; its waves rebound from a groupe of rocks partly visible and partly concealed from view, and form a frightful whirlpool called the bank. Immediately below the bank there is another whirlpool called the Gewirr, which, according to tradition, was formerly connected with Bingerloch, by a subterranean passage. The former whirlpool has often proved fatal to shippers, especially to the rafts, the force of which is frequently sucked five or six feet under the surface, and the crews plunged to their necks in water, and many a rower has found a grave beneath the deep blue waters foaming round him. Tradition hands down a mystic legend in connection with this spot, representing it as haunted by a beautiful mermaid, whose deeply rich and magic melody bewitched the passing boatmen to overwhelm and drown them in the cavern of her briny abodes.

To the left, the next object of interest we meet is Schomberg, a ruined castle built on a rock, and once the dwelling of an illustrious family of the same name, from which sprung Marshal Schomberg, the general of William the Third at the Battle of the Boyne, in Ireland. It is called the beautiful hill, from the fact of seven daughters of the house, who were as lovely as they were cold hearted, being turned into seven rocks, seen to this day below Oberwessel, rising out of the bed of the river.

GUTENFELS to the right, a ruined castle, situated above the town of Caub, upon a steep mount. Tradition derives it as named from a fair lady named Gauda, a favourite of Richard of Cornwall, Emperor of Germany, the brother of Henry III. of England. In 1807, it was sold for the consideration of a few hundred florins. There is, on a projecting point of rock, a watch house, which seems to be suspended in the air, from it you behold with giddy looks the river rolling by deep below you. It was here Gustavus Adolphus, in the thirty years' war, issued his orders against the Spaniards, who had taken their station on the opposite bank.

CAUB is seen on the right bank. It has 1300 inhabitants. It is chiefly remarkable for its slate quarries, which are considerable, and as being just close the spot where Blucher crossed the Rhine, on the 1st of January, 1814. From the heights above the Rhine first was seen by the Prussians who gave one loud and exulting cheer, shouting The Rhine! the Rhine! A toll is paid here to the Duke of Nassau by all vessels navigating the Rhine. The Duke is now the only person who exacts this feudal impost, though a couple of centuries since all vessels had to pay thirty-two tolls on their voyage of the Rhine. Opposite Caub, in the centre of the river, we see the fine old castle of Pfalz, built in the sixteenth century by the Emperor Lewis for a toll house. To this little island Louis le Debonnaire retired to die in 840. Tradition informs us that Pfalz served as a place of refuge for the Countesses Palatine during their accouchements, but the story is very improbable, to say the least of it. The castle can only be approached by a ladder, and a portcullis closes the only entrance to it. In remote times the dungeons underneath served as a prison for state prisoners. Downwards from Caub the valley has a more romantic appearance. The mountains draw nearer each other, the towns and hamlets have a more antique character, and wonderful traditions are told of the ruins of castles and clusters, of hills, and of the whirlpool, and other phenomena of nature.

BACHARAH is built along the bank of the Rhine. Its antique walls and open towers, by which it is encircled, are picturesque and ornamental. The mount against which the town is reclined, is planted with vines as high up as the ruins of the castle. The excellent quality of the wine of this place, to which the valleys of Stalg, Manebach, and Dubach belong, together with that of the adjacent eminences, the Schlossberg, Vogtsberg, and Kuchberg, is guaranteed by two respectable historical witnesses. Pope Pius II., better known as Æneas Silvus, ordered a tun of it to be sent annually to Rome, and the town of Norimberg was granted its freedom by the Emperor Wenceslaus, in return for four casks of it. Bacharah is the birth-place of the celebrated painter Kuchelchen.

The ruins of Stahleck, on the left, should be visited from this place, where one of the most beautiful views expands itself before him. The castle was of considerable extent, and seemed to have been built on the ruins of a roman stronghold. It was the seat of the Electors of Palatine until 1263, and is now the property of the Queen of Prussia, their descendant. Close below the castle stands the mutilated skeleton of the church of St. Werner, a beautiful specimen of gothic architecture, with its lofty painted window, exhibiting a perfect specimen of the most perfect tracery work. "Should the traveller stop here, he ought to devote an hour or two to visit the castle of Stahleck, and enjoy the magnificent prospect seen from it."—H. C.

Immediately under the town there is an isle in the Rhine of about thirty acres. Between this and the left bank of the Rhine there lies a stone called Ara Bacchi. Its appearance above water is hailed with joy by the vintner as a prognostication of a good vintage.

LORCHAUSEN is seen to the right. It is a small village that marked the ancient geographical border of the Rhine. Above the village, on the Bleichenberg, are seen the ruins of the frontier fortress of Sareck, also opposite to it the ruinous cloister of Winsbach. As far as this place the Rhine flows from east to west, which lays the vineyards open to the influence of the noontide sun, and the north and east winds are averted by the mountains on the left bank. The stronger vines thrive on the highest eminences, but the most wholesome ones in the middle regions; such as are produced in the low grounds become more potable at a later period. Higher up from Lorchhausen is the ruin of the ancient castle of Nollingen, from which a very interesting view can be had. A beautiful ground forms itself near the village of Rheindebach, above which rise the round keep tower and shattered walls of the Furstouburg, reduced to a ruin by the French in 1689. On the right is LORCH.—A village of 1800 inhabitants, built into the Wisperthal, or Valley of Whispers, on the right bank of which rises the Kedrick, or Devil's Ladder, a rocky height, at the top of which is the castle of Nollingen.

The district of the Rheingau, or Rhine, commences here and extends along the right bank as far as Wallof, including the vineyards which produce the most famous wines.

To the left we see the ruins of the castle of Weimburg, and higher up is the ruined ruin of Sonneck, originally a robber castle, destroyed by the Emperor Rudolph, in 1232.

Approaching Bingen and Assmanshausen, we see what may be truly styled the castellated Rhine. These castellated ruins, the most-covered stones, and prostrated halls, all speak forcibly of the past; and, whilst calling up in every one of their broken particles the memory of other days, cannot but remind the student, the historian, and the traveller, of the happy change which has been effected from feudal barbarism to civil and constitutional principles. As we proceed along, we are attracted by the castle of Reichaustein, or Falkenburg, which stands on our left, on a lofty jut of the rock, once a dreadful den of robbers, destroyed by Rodolph of Hapsburg, whilst further up, on the same bank, is the castle of Rheinstein, built on a projecting rock that rises from the bank of the river. Not far from here, between the road and the river, rises beautiful and grand the gothic church, dedicated to St. Clement, rescued from a state of ruin by Prince Frederick of Prussia. All, or nearly all, these stronghold of feudal robbery were destroyed at the close of the thirteenth century, by a decree of the Diet the Emper. The castle of Rheinstein is seen to the left; the ruins have been partially restored, so as to serve as a summer retreat for Prince Frederick of Prussia. The interior is well worth a minute inspection, and travellers will find no difficulty in getting access to it, there being a servant constantly there, who will shew visitors round it. Below Rheinstein there is a narrow pass, where, until very lately, there was demanded a Jews' toll. The contractors kept small dogs trained to single out and seize the Hebrew children, whose race have given us all that we hold dear, whether we regard the semetic principle always conservative of the great elements of society, or the Divine Nazarene born from a Jewish maiden to redeem and conserve a fallen world.

ASSMANSHAUSEN is seen to the right. All along between here and Ehrenfels, the terraced sides of the mountain are covered with vineyards, rising one above another to the very summit, kept up by strong stone walls of from five to eight feet high; in fact, the vineyards are nothing more than a succession of terraces, extending from the top to the bottom of the hills, some of which are near 1,000 feet high. Great and severe labour is required from the vinedressers in the cultivation of the vine in these places, who have to carry every particle of manure, and even the soil itself, on their shoulders to the hills. And yet, notwithstanding their severe labours, you behold them cheerful and happy. The culture of the vine, though it involves much and incessant labour, is yet uncertain and contingent on the weather, which, if severe, may in a few hours destroy the entire vintage, and there being no corn crops to supply its place, the cultivator is deprived of his sole means of subsistence.

Among the numerous sorts of Rhenish wines remarkable for their superior excellence, those of Laubenheim, Bischlim, and Assmanhausen are reckoned the most pleasant; those of Hochheim, Johannisberg, and Geisenheim are the most aromatic, and those of Nierstein, Marksbrunn and Rudesheim are the strongest and most spirituous. The Emperor Probus first introduced the culture of the vine on the Rhine and Moselle. The vintage of the Rhine does not take place now until November.

The Rossel. Assmanhausen is a good starting point from which to make an ascent to the Niederwald, but Bingen, or Rudesheim, having better inns, should be preferred. You first come to an open rotunda or small temple, where one of the most charming prospects on the Rhine greets the eye of the beholder, not surpassed by any in Germany. Pleasant paths serpentine through a wood free from underwood. The Rhine glides down before you, bespangled with town-like hamlets and towns, churches, villas, vinehills and mountains of verdant hue. Opposite lies Bingen, at the foot of a hill, bearing the ruins of a castle of Drusus; to the left rises Mount Rochus, with its pretty chapel; to your right the Nahe mixes its waters with those of the Rhine, and on the left bank of that river you behold Mount Rupert, with the ruins of a cloister. Near the tower of Mice or Mausethurm the rolling waves of the Rhine disappear between the dreary mountains of slate in an abyss. The spectator drags himself away from that charming spot, wishing ever and anon to return to it and daguerreotype the charming picture deeply in his mind. From the temple we proceed to the Rossel, or the foremost top of the Niederwald and shudder as we look into the gloomy gulf formed by the mountains on either side, rising in high perpendicular masses after a very picturesque fashion. The ruins of the castle of Ehrenfels hangs like an eagle's eyrie below, on the beetling rocks, and seems to be threatened alike by the tooth of time and by the swelling waves. The tumbling stream disappears as if engulfed by the abyss below, and its hollow roar rises awfully from the deep. The upper limit of the gorge of the Rhine, with all its grand scenery, is now reached. The river between Bingen and Boppard cuts across a chain of mountains, which it is supposed at one time dammed up its waters as far as Bask, until an earthquake, or probably the waters themselves, forced a passage and formed the present gorge or ravine through which the waters flow to the ocean. A remnant of this colossal barrier yet remains, and an artificial channel had to be cut through it in order to afford a passage to vessels. It is called Bingen Loch, or the Hole of the Bingen. The navigation of this part has been much improved, yet to the Prussian government is due the credit of having widened it from 20 to 210 feet. On the left we see the small monument commemorative of this event. Under the ruins of the castle of Ehrenfels lies this ~~channel~~

Close to the left bank, and adjacent to where the waters of the Nahe unite with the Rhine, is the Mosae Tower, notorious for Bishop Hatto's tradition. "There was," it tells us, "a great famine in all the land of the Rhine, and the men, women, and children perished for want of food. Crowds of the miserable peasants surrounded the castle of Ments, where Hatto held his feudal court, and implored for bread. He would extend his hand in benediction over them. But it held no loaf; and yet the barns of the archbishop were filled with grain. He treated them as idlers and imposters, who did not chose to work. The poor people became yet more importunate; they disturbed his sleep, and Hatto sent his bowmen to invite them,—all they could get, the strong and the sick, old men and children, and shut them up in his great barn, to which he then set fire! It was a sight to draw tears from a heart of flint; and when they screamed, Hatto laughed and said, 'Hear ye how the rats squeak in my barn!' But heaven was not blind. Swarms of rats overspread the castle; no one could remain in it! Hatto went higher and higher; they pursued him to the very roof. The more they were destroyed, the more did they increase; they seemed to rise up out of the earth. Hatto fled to Bingen. In the midst of the river he built his place of refuge, and went across to it in a small boat which held him alone. But the rats followed him over there; they swam across the river; they climbed over the walls and over the roof, they entered through every small hole, above and below. They devoured Hatto alive; they ate his very name embroidered in the tapestry which covered the walls of his apartment! In the morning mist which settles on the grey tower, the lonely fisherman sees even now the spirit of Hatto." Southey has versified this tale, against which history is decisive, for it tells us that the tower of Hatto was built in the early part of the thirteenth century, by Archbishop Siegfried, when he opened the navigation of the right bank, fully 200 years after the death of Hatto. The similarity of the German words Maus and Thurm—Maus meaning rat, and Thurm meaning tower of tolls, has probably been the temptation for fixing the legend there—the residence of the officer who collected toll for the archbishop, who, though one of the most distinguished statesman of his day, and the friend of the Emperor Otto, was yet a cruel and perfidious character.

BINGEN.—(Inn; Victoria) is situated in an angle of the beautiful valley of the Nahe, the frontier town of the Rheno-Hessian territory, has a population of 5,000 inhabitants. A considerable entrepôt for trade in corn and wines. The town is much frequented by strangers. The Rhine here makes a considerable curve, and the scenery around is in the highest degree attractive. The magnificent scenery in the neighbourhood is altogether lost to those who merely pass up and down the river. From here an excursion can be made to the ruin called Klopp, or Drums castle. Narrow and steep stairs lead to a platform covered with luxuriant vegetation of shrubs and creepers; and there are subterranean dungeons below the ruins, vestiges of the feudal times. From here also the traveller can set out to explore the Rodensberg, Rheinstein, and the Niederwald, which may be done in one day. A boat taken from Bingen takes us down the Rhine to the castle of Rheinstein (page 108.) in twenty minutes. If we proceed on foot, a mile can be saved by crossing the ferry, beneath the church, instead of proceeding round by the stone bridge. We cross to Assmannshausen from Rheinstein, and find donkeys for 1*fl.* 1*kr.*, to take us up to the Niederwald, (page 109.) And then we ascend for about one mile through the gully; behind the village we find a path leading from the right to the Jagd Schloss, where refreshments can be had. This excursion can be made in about an hour, and a few minutes more suffice to bring us to the Bezauberte Höhle, or Magic Cave. Here three magnificent landscapes of the Rhine may be enjoyed, each one different from the other, and presenting the appearance of a beautiful diorama. The Rosel (page 109.) is not far from the cave; overlooking the boisterous eddies of the Bingen loch. Here the ruin of Ehrenfels is seen clinging to the outer surface of the rock. This is one of the most magnificent views of the Rhine. The waters present rather a curious appearance in the river below, exhibiting three different colours. In the centre, the Rhine is a clear green; the Nahe, close to the left bank, a heavy brown; and the Main, at the right bank, a dirty red. Though the Main joins the Rhine more than 20 miles beyond Bingen, gen, yet the waters, it is asserted, do not mingle until their arrival at the deep pool of the Lurlei. The path now again sinks into the wood, and after a mile, arrives at the Temple, a round building seen to the right. It rests on pillars, constructed on the edge of the hill. (page 109.) A splendid prospect, extending up the Rhine and across the hills of the Bergstrasse and Odenwald, can be enjoyed here. The eye and mind will linger unconsciously on its beauties, until, after drinking in all the inspiration excited by the glorious development of the wild, the romantic, and the picturesque scenery with which it abounds, it must be confessed that it is the "loveliest landscape upon earth." We descend from the Temple in about half an hour to Rudesheim, by a path in the midst of vineyards, which is closed up in the vine season.

VIEWS OF THE COUNTRY

A very pleasant excursion can be made from Bingen up the Nahe to Kreuznach and Oberstein. The distance is 91 English miles. The journey from Bingen to Saarbrück by Kreuznach and Berkenfeld, can be made in 16 hours, by Schnellpost, which runs omnibuses between Bingen and Kreuznach, six times daily, fares, 10s. gr. A two horse carriage can be hired to the latter places and back, for 7 or 8fl.; inclusive of the drive, 2½ miles beyond Kreuznach, to Munsterlain-Stein, to visit the Rheingrabenstein. At Bingen, the Nahe discharges itself into the Rhine through the gate or portal formed by the Rochusberg on the right, and by the Rupertsberg on the left. In its course of 60 miles, it passes through Oldenburgh, Hesse Homburg, Prussia, Bavaria, and Hesse-Darmstadt, belonging to three different sovereigns. A road goes past the Scariacberg, (Mount Scariet, renowned for its red wine) through the villages of Mainster, Laubenheim, and Brezenheim. It traverses the left bank, which belongs to Prussia. The right bank belongs to Darmstadt.

KREUZNACH.—(Hotel Adler,) a poor town, of 9,000 inhabitants, belonging to Prussia, situated picturesquely along the castle mount, and watered by the Nahe. It is famous as a watering place, and is much frequented on account of its cold saline spring, rising in an island about a quarter of a mile from the town. Baths and a shed-house are erected, within a grove of acacias near it, approached by an avenue of poplars. There are brine baths here also. The chief objects worth seeing are the ruins of the Roman Castrum, the ruins of a beautiful church on the island, built in the 14th century, and the Krautsenberg. Two miles above Kreuznach, on the left bank of the Nahe, are the salt works of Thevdorahalle, and Konshalle on the right, the property of the Grand Duke of Darmstadt. One mile further there is the Munsterlain-Stein salt works, encircled by the Nahe, in which rises a dark red wall of porphyry, to the height of 600 feet, extending two miles to the village of Norheus, and having on its summit, the few remains of the Castle of Rheingrabenstein, built by the Rheingraves. The view from it is immense, and it is ascended either by crossing the ferry at the salt works, and ascending a steep path, or by descending upon it from the hill above, which is the more facile and better way.

The ruins of the Castle of Ebernberg lie fronting Rheingrabenstein, at the confluence of the Nahe and Aisenz. It belonged to Francis von Seckengen, one of the most daring and chivalrous knights-errant that closed the middle ages. He laid siege to the cities of Metz and Treves; and in this castle he sheltered from persecution, many of the early reformers. Melancthon, Bucer, Ecolampadius, and Ulric von Hutten, found a shelter here. The castle was surrendered, after a stout resistance, to the Electors of Hesse and Treves, who first robbed, and then burned it. In the valley of Aisenz are some picturesque ruins and fine old castles. The quicksilver mine of Landsberg is near Obermaschel, between which and Meisenheim there are some coal fields.

The road during the next stage leaves the bank of the Nahe, proceeds to Sobernheim, passing on the right, the castle and abbey of Sponheim, and seeing on the left, near Staudernheim, the few remains of Disibodenberg, once a magnificent abbey of Benedictines.

SOBERNHEIM.—A venerable old town, containing a population of 2,300. The prospect from the eminence of this little town—the charming valleys of the Glau and Nahe, and the town of Meisenheim is very pleasing. A basin shaped valley opens out at Montulstein, having at its extreme point, the majestic ruins of the castle of Dhaun. The path leading from them passes the villages of Dhaun and Johannsberg, below which, a road runs, through a wild gorge, to Kirn. Magnificent scenery greets the eye from the castle of Dhaun to OBERSTEIN.—A small, and dirty town, suspended in a picturesque manner to the mountain, which presents the appearance of a compact mass of rocks of porphyry, or amygdaloid, beautiful in agates and amethysts of great beauty and variety. The village church is built in a cavity of this rock, and its internal walls are covered with moss. It is approached by steps hewn in the rock and is lighted up by two large windows. An ancient castle crowns the summit of the mountain. This village excels in polishing agate, and the lover of mineralogy may expect to earn a rich crop in these mountains of black-stone and porphyry. Besides neat agates and amethysts, very fine crystals, of cubical scalyth, harmston, &c., are got here. Oberstein appertains to the duchy of Oldenburg, and the district on the opposite side to Prussia, which purchased it from Saxe-Coburg. Above this village, the Nahe loses its beauty and interest.

BUKENFELD.—The chief town of a district, is next met. It is only remarkable for its white ducal château. A good road, provided with relays of post-horses, leads from Bukenfeld, by Hermeskiel, over the Hochwald to Treves, a distance of 32 English miles. A very nice church is seen at Wendal.

Ottweiler, Friedrichstal, where is manufactured white glass. Three English miles north of Saarbrücken, at Duttweiler, is the coal mine which has been burning for fourteen years. When the air is moist, smoke and vapours arise from the bottom in great quantities, but when the air is dry, very little vapour issues from the clefts of the rock, which are covered with salt-petre and sulphur. You find here, petrifications, especially of wood and reeds, and in the slate, beautiful impressions of plants, &c.

SAARBRÜCKEN.—A pretty Prussian town, containing a population of 8,000 inhabitants, situated on the Saar, connected with St. Johann by a bridge. It was formerly the residence of the Princes of Nassau. In its vicinity are extensive coal mines. Arnane, possessing a splendid gothic church, is higher up the valley. There are schnell-posten daily to Saarouis and Saarburg; to Mans and to Kremsnach, and steam-boats run daily between Saarbrücken and Saarbois. Railways from Metz to Paris and to Mannheim, by Kaiserlautern.

Ascent of the Rhine continued.

RUDENHEIM (Hotel: Darmstadter Hof—good.)

—Tourists can make the excursion to the Niederwald from here as well as from Assmannshausen. Paths also lead from here to the Temple on the right, and on the left to Jagd Schloss, and to Rossel. A picturesque old tower is seen at the upper end of the town. The stupendous quadrangular castle of Brümserberg stands at the other extremity. It is a building of the 11th century, and consists of three vaulted stories, resting on walls of from ten to sixteen feet thick. Its present proprietor, Count Ingelheim, has it preserved from decay so far as possible. A lofty square tower stands close to it. The castle of Brümserhof is in the centre of the town, and is interesting because of the tradition interwoven with its history. Tradition tells us that Count Brümser of Rudesheim performed amazing feats of valour in the Holy Land. His name was honoured by the Franks, and dreaded by the Saracens. Among his other exploits he destroyed a ferocious and destructive dragon, the terror of the christian army. Scarcely had he dealt the last blow ere the Saracens seized and made him prisoner. During his long captivity, he consecrated his daughter to heaven, and made a vow that she should take the veil if he ever returned to the banks of the Rhine. At length his captivity ended, and with the pilgrim's staff he once more stood at his own castle gate. His daughter, the beautiful Gisella, came out to meet him, and tears of joy rolled down the furrowed cheeks of the aged warrior. But when he announced to her his vow, she turned pale and heard it with consternation, for she but waited her father's return to be married to young Otho to whom she was betrothed. Her tears or entreaties could not change her father's purpose, and he threatened her with his curse if she did not obey. She rose from his feet and opened the door of the tower which overlooking the Rhine. The tempest raged in the narrow valley—the river seemed a place of refuge, and the beautiful Gisella threw herself into the flood. Her body was found next day near the town of Hatton, and her cries had been heard by the lonely sentinel on the tower. Up to the present time the villagers and fishermen fancy they see the ghost-like form of Gisella hovering over the scene of her destruction, mingling her lamentations ighings of the winds. The greatness and grandeur of other days have now been transferred to Johannsberg, a metamorphosed into common dwellings. Between Kempden and Rudesheim ferry which conveys parties over the Mayence and Wiesbaden can be reached as always ready for hire. Diligences from Rudesheim to Wiesbaden.

Shortest road from Bingen to Mayence is by the Rhine. Visitors to the Brunnen of Nassau ferry to Rudesheim, and proceed on their way by the right bank of the Rhine should be made at Rudesheim to Loderwald, if not previously visited; at Loderwald to see the chateau and vineyard; thence to dine, and see the old Convent of Loderwald, about two miles distant from the Rhine, but before setting out, an understanding should be come to with the driver, to make these visitors to Schlangenbad face to face with the Rhine at Walluff. From Wiesbaden go on to Biebrich before reaching the Rhine, continuing by its side to Castelnau. The distance to Castelnau from Rudesheim is fourteen or fifteen miles. A scene of great loveliness is here formed, by the Rhine subsiding into gentle slopes, and the Taunus receding to the river. The river possesses many traits of soft beauty, delicate and sweet, mingled with grandeur and brilliancy.

HEIM.—A town containing a population of 1,500.

Here are the beautiful seats of the Counts of Sickingen and Digenfeld, and in the latter you may see the magnificent tomb of the Emperor Philip of Schonbrunn. The manor-house of Zwierlein contains a rich collection of glass which is well worth seeing. In the place rises the Rothenberg, visited by many strangers, and offering a most beautiful view. To the right we see on the heights the seat of Johannsberg, the property of the Metternich. It is situated in the vineyards, producing the most famous wine of the Rhine. After the Secularisation of the Abbey of Fulda, in 1803, this valuable domain became the property of the Prince of Prussia who did not possess it more than three years when Napoleon gave it to Marshall

Kellerman. On the termination of the war, it again changed hands, and was presented in 1816, by the Emperor of Austria, to Prince Metternich, who held it as an Imperial gift. He enlarged the chateau, giving the entire middle front an additional storey and a flat roof in the Italian style. The interior is plainly fitted up, and exhibits much taste in its decorations. In the palace chapel you see the family arms of the Metternich family painted on the glass windows by Hellme. A beautiful view may be enjoyed from the terrace. The vineyard originally belonged to Monks of the Abbey or Convent of St. John. The Johannistery of Mount St. John alias Biechelsberg, consists of about sixty acres, rising gently and commanding a beautiful prospect. Before you is the Rheingau with innumerable hamlets, villages, villas, and cloisters, the eminences covered with the ruins of castles, and the river with shady islands. The wine of Mount St. John has spread the fame of this eminence over a great part of Europe. The produce is reckoned at about forty butts, valued at 80,000 florins. The vines of this yard are called Reissbinger, and the choicest of the vines grow near the castle. The vintage takes place as late as possible, the grapes being suffered to retain the highest degree of maturity. So precious are they that the berries which drop off are picked up with forks expressly made for the purpose. So much as 2,200 florins has been paid for a cask containing 1,350 bottles, that is, more than £1 2s. a bottle. George IV, and the late King of Prussia were the purchasers. The wine is always placed in the cellars of the chateau and delivered out in bottles. At this place the Rhine finds its greatest breadth, of 2,000 feet, stretching itself out to double the width which it does near Rudesheim. Its breadth at Cologne is 1,360 feet, and at Weesel 1,500. From here up to Mayence small islands are scattered in the centre of the channel. To the right we see Winkel, called Vini Cella, from the fact of Charlemagne's wine-cellar being here. A very remarkable church is seen at Mittelheim. It is a structure of the twelfth century, and consists of nave and aisles with a white and grey portal. Near Hattenheim, a small village with 1000 inhabitants, is the palace of Reichartshausen, formerly the wine magazine of the abbots of Eberbach. The present proprietor, Count Schenk von beautified it by planting a charming garden, and placing in it a choice collection of paintings. Among them is one by Wilkie, called "Green may name." Hattenheim can also boast of handsome villas, and here grows on the Strahlenberg to the right a little higher up the river, the famous wine called Markobrunner, deriving its name from a well that waters this pleasant spot. The power and feudal greatness of the nobles of the Rheingau, have all but passed away, whilst their number has also been materially diminished. Few now reside on its banks, and to them belong the principal vineyards.

ERBACH is seen to the right. It is a small village with fine villas. Its old church, in which are the tombs of the Knights of Allendorf, is worth a visit. From this place two pleasant excursions can be made in the course of a few hours. One to Nieder-Ingelheim, not far distant from the left bank of the Rhine, from which eminence we behold the entire Rheingau and its charming scenery. This village is deserving a visit, as the most memorable in Germany, and another should be paid to the abbey of Erbach, at one time the most important monastic establishment on the Rhine. It is beautifully situated in a wood, not far from Ellfeld. It was founded in 1131 by St. Bernard de Clairvaux, but is now used as a house of correction and asylum for lunatics. These establishments are well managed, but seldom shewn to strangers. Its churches, which can be easily explored, are deeply interesting specimens of the Romanesque style, and scattered among them are some very curious monuments; those of Katsenelnbogen and Von Stein (de Lapide) are worth notice as are also the long Dormitory and Chapter House. The oldest of these churches is now occupied by vine presses. Up the slope of the hill, close to the Convent, is the famous Steinberg vineyard, consisting of about 100 acres. The vaults under these buildings have been transformed into vine cellars, for the ducal vineyards and costly wines. In them the Duke of Nassau keeps his "cabinet of wines." A magnificent view of the surrounding scenery can be had from the Moss-house, on the Bos, a height close by here. To the left can be seen Ingelheim, once the favourite residence of Charlemagne, but now a miserable village.

To the right, between Erbach and Ellfeld is the Draiser Hof, farm of Brail, formerly belonging to the convent. To the right you are the charming ELLFELD, a small place with 2000 inhabitants remarkable for the beauty of its situation and gothic towers. It is the capital of the Rheingau. Surrounding the town are very many beautiful country seats, that of Graf Von Ebs is pre-eminent as containing some good paintings, among which Susanna is the best. Close behind Ellfeld is Kiedrich in a fine valley, with a villa and is called Ketterhus, or Knight's rest. The church is well worth seeing. Its woodwork galleries and painted glass windows merit attention. Behind Kiedrich, you see the old castle of Scharfstein, once the residence of the Bishops of Mayence. It is here the Grafenbourg wine is made. A post leads to Schlangenbad, six miles distant. Feld Wallraf is to the right, and Ransenthal, famous for its wine, is four miles north-west.

SCHLESSTADT, a small village, containing 1,400 inhabitants, is seen to the right, and is remarkable as being the spot where the Rheingau ends as also for the picture gallery of M. Habel, which contains many paintings by the old masters. From here is a road to Schlangenbad, eight miles distant. The village of Franzenstein is four or five miles from Schlierstein. Approaching Bieberich the eminences along the bank rise in terraces, on which the vines are blowing, thus terminating the distance in a semicircle, which gives to the ruin the appearance of a large lake. To the right is

BIEBERICH.—Hotels:

Rheinischer Hof.

Hotel de l'Europe, dear.

Bieberich.—The summer residence of the Duke of Nassau, whose chateau, built of sandstone, looks beautiful from the river. It is now rather dilapidated, but is yet considered as one of the handsomest palaces on the Rhine. It is costly, and magnificently decorated in the interior and surrounded by gardens tastefully laid out in picturesquely situated. A small miniature castle stands within them, it is situated on the bank of an artificial lake, and in it are preserved a large number of Roman antiquities. These gardens are open to the public. The railway from Wiesbaden to Frankfurt, by Castel, passes Bieberich re and the greatest an improvement—from the exactions of the invention of the

ress from the earliest and yet continues to Germany, as its situa-a part of a hill on the faine has its confinaas called the Mogun-owes its existence to s Germanicus built
 e Marcus Agrippa, sed a fortified camp.
 e acron, or Drusus'
 part, and the sequesence enjoyed its most (half of the thirteenth and there it was that gers) had their princentury became glori-vention of the art of lace and residence of ttenberg, the inven-
 plendid bronze statue,
 , was erected to his pen space facing the l the expense, which he Civil Casino now ouse, which stood at pass. In the corner street and the Pfandcose-flesh) was born.
 was the house called lberhof. The new now occupy the site of which he was buried.
 , also a citizen, ori-eby commerce was ns and oppressions of o overran the entire
 h century with their ed a confederation of rmation of the Rhen-
 r the energetic reign
 a of Hapsburg, this the reduction to their idion of many of the nks of the Rhine.
 an the most essential beautified it by planting placing in it a choice

 Among them is one I my name." Hattenhel
 some villas, and here gr
 the right a little higher wine called Markobru from a well that waters power and feudal great Rheingau, have all but number has also bee Few now reside on belong the principal vi

ERRACH is seen to t village with fine villas.
 are the tombs of the worth a visit. From excursions can be mad hours. One to Niede
 tant from the left be which eminence we be and its charming s deserving a visit, as t
 Germany, and anothe abbey of Erbach, at portant monastic estat
 It is beautifully situ
 from Ellfeld. It w
 St. Bernard de Clair
 as a house of correc'lon
 These establishments seldom shewn to stran can be easily explore specimens of the Ron tered among them are ments; those of Katze
 (de Lapide) are worth Dormitory and Chapte
 these churches is now
 Up the slope of the hill
 the famous Steinberg about 100 acres. The fings have been transfor the ducal vineyards an
 the Duke of Nassau kee
 A magnificent view of can be had from the M height close by here.
 Irgeheim, once the fav
 Samagne, but now a m
 To the right, betw

w the train on a Rhine.
e top of a hill.
nt view of the
he vine grown
Rhenish wines.
yards, but the ies growing on ht acres. This sun, and pro-
7 the houses of

d at.
here tourists
ue Mountains.
ay crosses the lochst station.
urch, and the
r's of Mayence.
ilway of three ount Taunus, to Konigstein.
alkenstein are
f the road an ndary of the

tels:
Europe, con-
rn to English
nd attention.
family hotel.

st-rate family
l Alten.
ebuch, well-
family hotel.
nfortable.
t, conveniently

the English

RAL.—Samuel

218, Rue de

nted and fast rt to Horn-starting from ch hour—the
m. This new ell and
the

and unfortunate period of the history of Mayence, when Custine appeared before the town and took it without resistance. In 1793 the French evacuated it after a determined defence, having obtained an honourable capitulation, and appeared before it again in 1794, with a powerful besieging army, from which it was delivered in 1795 by the victory of General Claufalt, after which an Austrian garrison occupied it until 1797, when the cession of the left bank of the Rhine to the French caused to Mayence a total change of all its relations. By the peace of Paris the city was again incorporated with Germany, and in 1816 ceded to the Grand Duke of Hesse Darmstadt, to whom it still belongs, and is one of the most important towns in his dominions. It is the chief fortress of the German Confederation, and is governed, alternately, every five years, by a governor chosen from either nation, and garrisoned by the Austrians and Prussians in common. It is now the capital of Rhenish Hesse, and has a population of 36,000 inhabitants, and 8,000 in garrison.

The Kurfürstliche Schloss, or ancient palace of the Electors of Mayence, now a museum; the Grossherzogliche Schloss, originally the Teutonic house, which Napoleon lodged in, and the Arsenal, are situated upon the quay where the steamer stops.

The chief objects of attraction in Mayence are the Cathedral, erected partly in the tenth century, by Archbishop Williges, but not completed until the eleventh century. It is a vast red building, choked upon the north and south-west by mean houses. It is built in the massive round style of architecture. Conflagrations, bombardments by the Prussians, and desecration by the French, who turned it into a magazine and barracks, in 1813, have severely injured the edifice, the original of which is only preserved at the east end, behind the altar. At this end the octagonal tower has been surmounted with a cupola of cast iron 70 feet high. It has a double choir, and high altars at the east and west, with two transepts. The most beautiful of the two choirs is that of All Saints, containing a very fine window, built in 1317. The double chapel of St. Gothard is an interesting specimen of the Gothic style, built in 1136, and to the shame of the owners, is now let as a leather warehouse. In the interior of the cathedral are several monuments worth seeing, among the most worthy are those of Archbishop Peter Von Asfeldt crowning Henry VII., Louis the Bavarian and John king of Bohemia, Prince Albert of Saxony, Canon Bernard Von Breidenbach, Archbishop Borthold Von Henneberg, Fastrada, wife of Charlemagne, close to the magnificent doorway leading into the cloisters, Minstrel of Minneanger (praise the ladies), who was carried to his grave by the ladies of Mayence, so great a favourite was he of theirs; St. Boniface, first archbishop of Mayence and Apostle of Germany; he was an Englishman, born at Crediton, in Devonshire, and professor of poetry, history, rhetoric, and the Holy Scriptures in the Benedictine Abbey of Nutsall, near Winchester. He left England with eleven other monks to preach the gospel in Germany, and was created bishop by Gregory II., and archbishop and primate of Germany by Gregory III., and Archbishop of Mentz, as the German metropolitan see, by Pope Zachary.

The Pulpit will attract attention; an ancient font of lead behind the eastern altar, and the brazen doors opening into the Market-street. The doors are of the tenth century. Bishop Adelbert I., in 1135, had engraven on the upper valves an edict granting important privileges to the city in consideration of his gratitude to the citizens who delivered him from the hands of the emperor, whose person they seized and detained until the bishop was restored to them. Two very ancient chalices are preserved in the sanctuary. The canons of this cathedral returned rather a remarkable answer to the pope on the occasion of his reproving them for their luxurious and worldly manner of living. It was, "We have more wine than is needed for the mass, but not sufficient to turn our mills with."

The Churches of St. Stephen and St. Ignatius, the former of which is pleasantly situated on the most elevated spot of the town, and contains some altarpieces interesting to the lovers of art. The church of St. Peter, contains a splendid chime of bells, and the parish church of St. Emmeran, with its beautiful altarpiece, representing the Ascension of the Virgin.

The Museum has a collection of paintings no ways distinguished. It however contains a very large collection of Roman antiquities, consisting of 27 altars and votive tablets, 60 legion

W the train on a Rhine.
b top of a hill.
nt view of the
he vine grown
Rhenish wines.
yards, but the
ies growing on ht acres. This sun, and pro-
the houses of

d at.
here tourists
pus Mountains.
ray crosses the
lochst station.
arch, and the
e's of Mayence.
dway of three ount Tannus,
to Konigstein.
alkenstein are
at the road an ndary of the

stels:
Europe, con-
m to English and attention.
family hotel.

st-rate family
l Alten.
sbuch, well-
family hotel.
mfortable.
conveniently

the English

MAL.—Samuel

219, Rue de

nfed and fast fort to Homstarting from ch hour—the
n. This new rail and
-A. See

and unfortunate when Custine approached it without resistance, captured it after it obtained an hour's respite before the besieging army, in 1795 by the vict which an Austr 1797, when the c Rhine to the Fré change of all its Paris the city of Germany, and in of Hesse Darmsta is one of the dominions. It is man Confederatio every five years, either nation, and Prussians in c of Rhenish Hesse inhabitants, and 8

The Kurfürstliche the Electors of 1 Grossherzogliche tonic house, which Arsenal, are situa steamer stops.

The chief obje are the Cathedral century, by Archi pleted until the elc building, choked west by mean hou round style of a bombardments by tion by the French sine and barracks, the edifice, the o served at the eas this end the oct mounted with a cu It has a double che and west, with two tiful of the two c containing a very d double chapel of specimen of the to the shame leather ware stone, with inscriptions, and a model of the stone bridge which Napoleon proposed to throw over the Rhine here.

The Town Library contains more than 80,000 books, among which are many rare and excellent works. In it are the Psalterium of 1459, the Bible of 1452, the Catholicon of 1460, and several thousand more books belonging to the century in which printing was invented. It is open each day (Sundays and Festivals excepted), from eight o'clock until ten. The most in great works in the picture gallery are, an Apollonia, by Domenichino; a Kneeling Carmelite, and an Ascension of the Virgin, by Augustine Caracci; St. Francis, by Querolino; a Christ in the Temple, by Jordans; Adam and Eve, by Albert Dürer; the Housewife of Rubens, by Snijders, &c. But the pearl of the collection is a Madonna, suckling the infant, by Lorenzo S. Lippelloni.

The Public Gardens inside the fortifications are worth a visit. They command a splendid view of the junction of the Maine and Rhine, of the town, and the Rheingau, and of the remote range of Taunus. On Fridays, between 4 and 5 p.m., the bands of the Austrian and Prussian regiments play here. The citadel will also repay a visit.

The English Church service is performed each Sunday in the Lycee, formerly Jesuits' College.

The Railway from Castel to Frankfort in one hour; to Wiesbaden in a quarter of an hour. Trains run six times daily.

The Eleagen daily to Darmstadt, Coblenz, Worms, and Staabuck.

The Steam Boats from Mayence to Coblenz and Cologne, several times a-day; to Mannheim, twice daily, in summer; and daily, to Strasburg.

From here excursions can be made to Frankfort and Wiesbaden by railway.

ROUTE 23.

Mayence to Frankfort.

Conveyance by railway in one hour.

This line was opened in 1840, and consists of single rail, except at those points where the rails pass each other. The station is on the right bank of the Rhine, at Castel, opposite Mayence, from which place omnibuses ply to Castel, fare 2kr. The line to Wiesbaden, which is a branch one, is carried through the fortifications of Castel, and passes Montebello to Masbach station, from whence horses draw the train on a branch line, to Biebrich-on-the-Rhine.

HOCHHEIM, a small village on the top of a hill. From the eminence, an excellent view of the Maine and Mayence is had. The wine grown here is ranked among the best Rhemish wines. Here there are a great many vineyards, but the best wines are made from the vines growing on the height, on a spot of about eight acres. This hill is completely exposed to the sun, and protected from the north winds by the houses of the town.

FORNSHEIM station is next arrived at.

HATTESHEIM station.—From here tourists start for the excursion to the Taunus Mountains. Leaving this last station, the railway crosses the Nidda, by a bridge, on which is Hochst station. It is remarkable for its old church, and the deserted old palace, once the Elector's of Mayence. From here there is a branch railway of three miles to Soden, at the foot of Mount Taunus, whence a diligence takes us on to Königstein. The Feldberg and Castle of Falkenstein are visible from this, and on the left of the road an old watch tower marks the boundary of the territory of Frankfort.

FRANKFORT-ON-THE-MAINE.—Hotels:

DE RUSSIE, one of the best in Europe, conducted by Mr. Reid, well known to English travellers for his obliging civility and attention.

D'ANGLETERRE.—An excellent family hotel. Landlord, Mr. J. G. Berthold.

DE L'EMPEREUR ROMAIN, a first-rate family hotel; landlord, Messrs. Lohr and Alten.

DE L'UNION, formerly Weidenbusch, well-known, excellent, and reasonable family hotel.

LANDSBERG.—Excellent and comfortable.

WESTERDHAL, a very good house, conveniently situated near the railway station.

CAFE MILANI, where most of the English papers can be seen.

UNITED STATES CONSUL GENERAL.—Samuel Ricker, Esq., 41, Hochstrasse.

Dr. Coar, from Philadelphia, 219, Rue de Frankfort, Borkenheim, Frankfort.

During the summer, well-appointed and fast four-horse coaches run from Frankfort to Homburg, and vice versa, in one hour; starting from the Post Office in either town at each hour—the first at 8 a.m., and the last at 10 p.m. This new conveyance is far better than the rail and omnibus. The fares are the same, and the journey is performed in less time.

Free town, with 70,000 inhabitants, and seat of the German Diet. It occupies, including Sachsenhausen, with which it is connected by a stone bridge, on the left bank of the Maine 625 acres, and is one of the most beautiful cities in Germany. In the New Town, are a great number of houses and fine palaces, especially those in the main street in the New Mainz and Taunus Strauss.

The Old Town is remarkable for its venerable watch-towers which as it were bound the former extent of its precincts. The houses are very old and form a deep contrast to the ones in the new town.

The Cathedral is remarkable for its antiquity, also as being the place where for many years the Emperors were crowned. At a very early period an Abbey founded by Louis the German and a pious Franconian was connected with the church. The nave which is the most antique part dates from the thirteenth century, and the choir from the fourteenth century, when it received its present shape. It is built in the form of a cross, and has one unfinished tower which is obtuse at the top, and at which men were working from 1415 to 1503, though it is still unfinished. It is considered the last specimen work of the ancient German architecture. Its interior is plain and unadorned, being whitewashed, and having a gallery around the aisles and one of the transepts. It contains one or two monuments, the most remarkable of which is that on the right of the choir, dedicated to the memory of the unfortunate Emperor Guenther of Schwarzburg, killed by Charles V., and another in the chapel on the left side of the choir, a clumsily ornamented one, that of Rudolph of Sachsenhausen.

The most remarkable public building is the Town House, called Römer. It is a building of the 16th century, less interesting for its architectural appearance, than for its historical note. Here is the election room, at present the Hall of the Senate, where the electors or their deputies used to assemble; the Kaiseraal, or Imperial Hall, with the portraits of all the Emperors, from Conrad I. to Francis II., hanging on its walls. In it is also preserved the relic known as the Golden Bull. There are several other paintings in the hall, which has been re-decorated in the ancient style. On an end wall is the judgment of Solomon, by Steinbo. The Kaiseraal is the public on Wednesdays and Mondays 10 a.m. to 1 p.m.

In the Market Place, called the Römer opposite the Imperial building, an em was roasted on each event of an imperial election, from which the Arch Stewards call for the Emperor. Wine flowed from a f with which the Arch-Cupbearer filled, and corn was distributed from a silver by the Arch-Marshal, to the populace, w privileged to cut a scrap of the scarlet which the Emperor walked, and in man to the great danger of having his heels cut he was slow in his movements.

The Saathof, long since private p was originally a royal palace. Nothing remains of this building but a chaq burying vault.

St. Leonard's Church, built in 1323, (the spot where once stood Charlemagne's wherein he usually assembled the Princes, and nobles of the Empire. bank of the Maine is Sachsenhausen, colony, inhabited by a different race f Franks, on the right bank. On the old Sachsenhausen stands the ancient p the Knights of the Teutonic orders, a by are the remains of the old Palace Counts of Isenberg. Frankfort has ven institutions, promotive of arts and science reflect much credit on it.

The Stædal Museum of Pictures, a building in the New Mainzer Strasse, call its founder, is an artistical institution fo painters and architects, designers and en Its founder, the banker, Stædal, left his ous pictures and collections of prints, his and a sum of 1,200,000f. ($83,000.) for tation of the Institute, the object of whi solely the cultivation of the arts, but aiding young artists by proportionable am The public are admitted to this collecti day, from 10 to 1; and on Saturday, a is accorded to strangers from 11 to 1.

The splendid artistical collection of Dr. purchased for this institution, added com to its value. The principal pictures in lection belong to the Flemish School. logue may be obtained at the door.

The Seneborg Museum of Natural Hi has a very good collection, and very well arranged. It contains some rare specimens brought from Egypt, Nubia, Abyssinia, and the shores of the Red Sea, by Reppell, the celebrated traveller. At the top of the Wopse is a small Ethnological Collection.

The Public Library is a pretty building, and contains a good collection of volumes. It is open to the public on Tuesdays and Thursdays, from 11 to 12. In the library are portraits of Luther, and of his wife Catherine; a bird, two pair of Luther's shoes, two missals, and a good copy of the 1st edition of the Bible, printed by Faust, at Mentz. It is open on Tuesdays and Thursdays, from 11 to 12; and on Wednesdays and Fridays, from 2 to 3. To the rear of the library we see St. George's Hospital, a light and elegant building.

Goethe and Luther were born here, the former in the house marked F, No. 74 in the Firschgraben. On the front is his father's coat of arms, bearing the poetical devices of three lyres. In the Alte, facing the Theatre, stands a statue to his memory, executed by Schwanthaler, of Munich. The figure and pedestal are of bronze. A Latin inscription and his bust mark the house in which Luther resided in the Don Platz. The inscription is as follows: "In silentio et spe erit fortitudo vestra." "Silence and hope shall be your strength." Frankfort is also distinguished as being the birth place of the Rothschild family. In the Judengasse, or Jew's Street, is the house in which they were born.

The Jews are now treated more liberally and justly than they were formerly.

The New Exchange, or Bourse, lately erected, will attract attention. It is built in the Byzantine style, and in the front is ornamented with statues of Hope and Prudence, the divisions of the Earth, Commerce, &c. Banking, and jobbing in the funds, are the two principal businesses of Frankfort.

The Frankfort Fairs are held at Easter, and three weeks previous to Michaelmas; during their continuance the inns are very crowded.

The residence of the Austrian Ambassador, formerly the Palace of the Prince of Thurn and Taxis, now serves as a place of meeting for the Germanic Diet.

Demmecker's Statue of the Ariadne.—This celebrated statue the boast of Frankfort, is placed in a cabinet; the lights of which are regulated by transparent blinds, in the gardens of M. Bethmann, and is shewn to visitors from 10 to 1 daily.

The Monument erected to the memory of the Hessian soldiers, killed in 1792, stands outside the Friedburg Gate.

Ministers from all the principal courts in Europe, and from the United States, reside here, and travellers should not neglect, when going to Italy or Austria, to get their passports properly visé.

The Passport Offices are only open a short time in the day; no time should be lost in sending the passport. The English passport office is open from 9½ to 12 o'clock; the United States, 11 to 1; Austrian and Prussian, 10 to 12 and 3 to 5, p.m.; and the Bavarian, 9 to 11.

A signature of the representative of the country to which the traveller belongs, must be procured to his passport before it will be visé. To this rule there is no exception. Church of England service is celebrated each Sunday, at the French Chapel, in the Allé, or in the Lutheran Church, at 11½, by the Chaplain to the Embassy.

The Theatre is open five days in the week. The performance begins at 5 a.m., and ends generally at 9 p.m. At Rockenheim, on the North-West, there is a Summer Theatre.

The third continental Peace Congress was held at Frankfort on the 22nd August, 1859, and the two following days. The special train from London, via Calais and Cologne and thence up the Rhine, contained about 500 delegates and visitors. The place of meeting was St. Paul's church. This magnificent building, capable of holding more than 2,000 persons, was thronged each day. The proceedings were similar in character to those at Brussels and Paris in 1848 and 1849; and the effect of this Congress on the public mind is understood to have been very satisfactory to its promoters.

The Post Office, No. 52, in the Ziel, not far from the Hotel de Russie, on the same side.

The Casino takes in English and French journals. Strangers are admitted on being introduced by a member.

British consul, Mr. Koch, near the Hotel d'Angleterre.

Physician, Dr. Funk, Physician to her Majesty's Mission.

English and Foreign Bookseller.—C. J. J. J.

The Public Gardens are at the western extremity of Frankfort. A band plays in them each afternoon.

The Old and New Cemeteries are situated about 1½ English miles from the Friedburg Gate, and worth visiting. They command a good view of Frankfort and the Taunus, and contain a large number of interesting monuments, among which are those of the Bethman family, and of the Countess of Reichenbach, wife to the late Elector of Hesse. Here is also a monument to the Prince Lichnowsky and General Auerswald, the Prussian Deputies, murdered in the revolution of 1848 by cowardly assassins.

In these cemeteries are buried Sommering, the naturalist, and Feuerback the lawyer.

Steamers on the Maine to Wurzburg daily; also to Mayence.

ROUTE 24.

Bingen to Mayence,

BY ING. HEIM.

Distance 16 English miles. From Bingen to Mayence there are two roads, one, the most interesting, along the left bank, and another on the left bank, remote from the side of the river. Schnellposts daily traverse both roads. The road on the left, on leaving Bingen, skirts the foot of the Rothenberg, and commences a long, but gradual ascent to an eminence, near the top of which stands a small obelisk erected by the French, and bearing this inscription, "Route de Charlemagne, terminée en l'an premier du règne de Napoleon." The route of Charlemagne, finished in the 1st year of the reign of Napoleon. From here, and from the adjoining heights, a magnificent view can be enjoyed, embracing the Rhine, the Rheingau, and the distant heights of the Taunus. In a position lovely and picturesque, we see Charlemagne's favourite residence, INGELHEIM—situated about 1½ miles from the bank of the Rhine, is now reduced to a wretched and miserable village. It was once, we are told by historians, the spot where Charlemagne loved to live and dwell, and where he built himself a magnificent palace and decorated it with one hundred pillars of marble and porphyry, and with red mosaics sent to him by Pope Adrian. Mud cabins, dung-hills, and a Jews' burial-ground now occupy the site where once stood this magnificent edifice. The only memorials of its existence now remaining, are a few mutilated fragments of pillars within one of the two churches, near which it stood, and a column of granite inserted in a corner of an old gateway. In this church also, the one nearest to Mayence, is the monument of one of Charlemagne's four queens. The other church, on the side of Bingen, is an interesting monument of the Romanesque style. Ingelheim wine is also famous.

ROUTE 25.

Saarbrück to Treves,

BY SAARLOUIS.

Distance 56½ English miles; conveyance by schnellpost, in 10 hours.

The road from Saarbrücken (page 112) to Treves, descends the sweet valley of the Saar.

SAARLOUIS is a frontier fortress of France, of great strength. The Saar half encircles the town, sometimes laying it under water, and is spanned by a long stone bridge. The fortifications were constructed by Vauban, in the reign of Louis XIV. It has a population of 7,000, chiefly descended from English prisoners confined there by the above named king. During the first French revolution it was called Saralibre. It is remarkable as the birth-place of Marshal Ney. The Peace of Ryswick guaranteed this place to France, but the treaty of 1814 secured it to Prussia, to which sovereignty it at present belongs.

MERZIG.—At Mettlach, between here and Saarburg, is a pottery, formerly a Benedictine abbey, founded and endowed in the 7th century. (From a cliff all but inaccessible, the ruins of the castle of Montclair command a view of the valley.) After crossing the Saar by ferry, the road leads us up an ascent, and at three miles distance from Saarbrück, we see Castel, originally a Roman castle, put in repair by the King of Prussia in 1835, and transformed into a chapel, to receive the remains of John, King of Bohemia, son of the emperor Henry VII, killed in 1346, at the battle of Crecy.

SAARBURG, a small village delightfully situated at the mouth of the valley of the Saar. On the Lewk, which here falls into the Saar, is a beautiful waterfall, near some picturesque ruins. The broken fragments of a summer palace of the lower empire is met with a little higher up, near which is Lyei Monument.

TREVES.—(Fr. Tyèves, Ger. Trier).—Inns:

Trierischer Hof—very good.

Das Rothe—good.

Luxemburger Hof.

This ancient town, so memorable in history, lies in a charming valley, surrounded by low vine-clad hills, which is open from south-east to north-west, on the right bank of the Moselle, and contains a population of 16,000. A beautiful basin encircles the town, from the mouth of the Saar to that of the Kyall. Above and below it, small villages appear, like suburbs. Its interior is very agreeable, the streets being for the most part regular and large, and embellished with many fine houses; the slated roofs however render the place rather sombre and gloomy. The inscription "Ante-Roman Trevis stetit annis MCCC,," on the walls of the former town hall, would lead us to believe that Treves was built before Rome. At all events, it is the oldest city in Germany, and was when the Romans under Julius Cæsar, (B.C. 53,) first invaded it, a flourishing capital, having a polished population, and the seat of many famous buildings. Augustus established a Roman colony here, called Augusta Trevirorum, immediately after the partition of Gaul, and settled there the supreme courts of administration, and Treves became the metropolis of the first Belgium—comprising not only Belgium so-called, but the entire of Spain and Britain: Roman laws were issued and imperial crowns struck there, and cloth, arms and military stores were supplied to the Roman legions. It was also the residence of several Roman emperors, and in the great distribution of the empire, under Constantine the Great, the prætorian prefect of Gaul, was appointed to have his residence at Treves, which first removed to Arles, when the German nations began to invade the Roman possessions. Here also lived in high offices, Ausonius, the poet of the Moselle, the preceptor and friend of the emperor Gratianus. Indeed it may be said that when science was lost and arts had nearly perished, and when the polished languages were exchanged for the unintelligible jargon of northern barbarism, Treves was the seat of the temple, within the sanctuary of which the time honoured roll of literature found a refuge and a home from the stormy blasts of barbarism, until the spirit of her genius brooding a second time o'er the turbulent chaos, dried up the foul waters, and prepared a way for science to re-visit the dwellings of men. And this old and venerable city, when the Vandal, the Hun, and Goth, poured their barbaric legions into her devoted bosom, sweeping away, like the stormy sorocco, the purest monuments of her civic glory, the brightest trophies of her refinement in the arts and sciences, the sun of her imperial glory paled, and, though sorrowful in the dark glare of carnage and sanguinary desolation, was not then subdued, for scarcely had the storm subsided and the hurricane ceased to blow, when like a giant leviathan, she rose from her ruins, and from the ashes in which she was seated, and under the sway of the crozier and mitre, clothed herself again in all her ancient glory, rebuilt her temples, erected new altars to literature, consecrated anew the vestibules of her early imperialism, and endowed her venerated institutions with even more than their ancient splendour. In 1702-4, the English, under Marlborough, took Treves. Its churches and convents were stripped of all their wealth and ornaments, and turned into stables by the French during the revolution. Previous to this, Treves possessed more ecclesiastical buildings than any city in Europe of a similar size.

Treves, after having been the seat of imperialism, spiritual and civil courts of the electorate, of a chapter, an episcopal college and an university, is now the seat of a Prussian Regency. As a town it is decayed and faded, and only interesting because of its historical glories and for the Roman remains still existing in it. These remains constitute the most extensive relics of the once masters of the world, saved from remote antiquity. As memorials of their architecture, history, &c., vastness and not beauty is the distinctive characteristic of their appearance, and in this they differ from remains found in the south of France and elsewhere. Christianity and Vandalism have, the latter by its barbarism, and the former by its prejudice, done much to annihilate and disfigure these memorials of Roman dominion.

* The Cathedral of St. Peter and St. Helen is situated on the highest eminence in the town. The front and east side of it, consisting of Roman masonry, are said to have belonged to the palace of the Empress Helena, or to the number of large basilicas built under Constantine the Great.

whose mother, we are told, deposited in the church the Seamless Coat of our Saviour, which, after being hidden for 134 years, was, in 1844, for eight weeks exhibited to the veneration of one million, one hundred thousand pilgrims! Huge columns of granite adorned in the eleventh century that part where now the great choir stands; remains of them are still lying before the main entrance. In addition to the traces of Roman Byzantine architecture, we also discover traces of the middle ages in the interior of the well-preserved cloister which adjoins the church. In the interior of the church are several monuments of the electors of Treves, among which is that of the soldier-prelate Richard Von Greifenklaw. The pulpit carving is pretty good, and the seats of the choir are inlaid with ivory and wood carving, and beneath the church are vaults in which repose the bones of archbishops and electors. Large funds accrue to this church from the exhibition of the Holy Coat, and a portion of them are devoted to the repair of the cathedral.

Close to the cathedral is the Liebfrauen Kirche, or Church of Our Lady. It occupied from 1227 to 1243 in building, and is in the most elegant Pointed style; it is one of the earliest specimens of pure Gothic architecture. The disposition of the plan is grand, and the proportions are happily chosen. The eastern choir terminates in the form of a cross, the pieces of which form two lateral passages northward. The semicircular portal is richly ornamented with sculpture, and twelve columns, each bearing the figure of an apostle, support the interior. These may all be seen at once from a marked spot near the door. They shew here the well-preserved corpse of St. Hildulph, bishop of Treves. The monument of Archbishop Von Sirk, and the doorway in the north transept, are worth inspection.

The Porta Martis, commonly called the Black Gate, or Porta Nigra, is situated at the northern extremity of the town, near the Simeonsthor, and is one of the most interesting objects of antiquity in the city. Its origin or date cannot be ascertained, but it is surmised to have been built in the reign of Constantine the Great. Tuscan columns decorate the front, and its basement story is very massive, and probably built as the entrance on the north of the city, wall. Some writers place the date of its erection before the arrival of the Romans, and designate it the council-house of the Belgæ. Its style of architecture would, however, contradict this, and lead us to believe it a building belonging to the lower empire. In 1305 the building was converted into a church by Archbishop Popo, and dedicated to St. Simeon, an anchorite, who in the eleventh century, on his return from the Holy Land, took up his position on the top of the edifice, acquired a reputation of great sanctity, and at his death was added as a saint to the Roman calendar. Napoleon stripped the lead from the roof on his arrival at Treves and had it cast into bullets. The Prussian government, in 1816, had it cleared of rubbish, to open the folding door for the first time in 1817, for the entry of the king of Prussia and the Crown Prince. Thus all late defacements have been removed, and only the lateral building of the eleventh century, containing the choir and altar, is left standing, it is a fine specimen of Roman architecture. This porta is constructed of grey reddish blocks of sandstone, grown black by the influence of time, and so closely connected, without the application of mortar or cement, that the joints could scarcely be discerned, but they have been chipped and mutilated at their angles, in order to extract the metal clamps that united them. In the interior are some broken fragments of antiquity, the most remarkable of which are a bas relief of gladiators, a mermaid with two tails, several earthen pipes, and some Roman milestones.

The Palace of the Electors and Bishops. The bold and gigantic construction of this building is still visible in its ruins. The edifice is now a barrack. The principal staircase is a rare specimen of rich and elaborate carving. It stands upon the site of an enormous Roman edifice, a fragment of which only remains, the other parts being removed in 1814 to make way for the Episcopal Palace erected on its ruins. The fragment remaining is a semicircular tower rising on high, and is called Heidenthurm, or Heathen's Tower. The walls are 90 feet high and 10 feet thick, and gives some idea as to the colossal dimensions of the building when entire. The construction is entirely of bricks and tiles, and is a masterpiece of architecture, there not being a crack or break in the walls now after a lapse of ages. It is now used as a church, for rich purpose it was cleared out by orders of a king of Prussia. From the portals of this broken ruin were issued those decrees which gave laws to Rome, Constantinople, and to Britain at the one epoch. It was also the favorite residence of Constantine. An open space in front of this building serves as a drill-ground for the troops, and at its further extremity are the ruins of the baths or Thermæ, the vicinity of the Holy Cross. Though much dilapidated, these ruins have been laid bare by the directions of the Prussian government. They resemble, in their vaulted rooms, reservoirs, stoneware pipes and channels for hot and cold water, the Thermæ of Cara Calla and Dometian Rome.

VIEWS OF THE RHODANE.

To the east of the baths is the Roman Amphitheatre, appearing as if scooped out of the sand, a hill covered with vineyards. It was once the arena of the "magnificum spectaculum—venæ supplicia," with which Constantine entertained his subjects. They were called Ludi areolæ, or Frankish sports, and consisted in posing many thousands of unarmed Frankish warriors to be torn in pieces by wild beasts. The arena is 234 feet long and 155 feet broad. The circus mentioned by Augustinus in his comments, lay in a southern direction from the amphitheatre.

The Bridge over the Moselle is 690 feet long and 24 feet broad, and is probably one of the best ancient monuments in Treves. It had 8 arched openings, constructed entirely of pieces of lava. The pillars of the bridge are, on an average, 66 feet long and 21 feet broad, and date from the reign of Augustus. It originally stood at the centre of the town, and resisted during the cycle of centuries, the efforts of barbarism, till the French blew it up in the wars of Louis XV., and hence the only parts now remaining are the piers of large stones from the lava quarries, at Mendia, near the lake of Laach.

Without the town there were four Abbeys of Benedictines, renowned for their great wealth, not a fragment of which now remains, and modern structures have even replaced the old edifices. They were those of St. Matthew, now a school; St. Maximin, now a barracks; St. Martin on the Moselle, now a china factory; and St. Mary of the Four Martyrs, below the town on the site now occupied by the Roman prefect's palace, where the soldiers of the Theban legion suffered martyrdom.

The University, which had greatly declined, was formed by the French into a college, and is at present used as a gymnasium, in which is placed the town library, containing 94,000 volumes, a M.S. of the four gospels, the famous Conix Aureus, written in golden letters, bound in plates of gilt silver, with figures embossed in high relief, interspersed with precious stones, and having in the centre, a splendid cameo, representing Augustus and his family, besides several other literary curiosities. Among the collection of curiosities is Gutenberg's first bible, many other printed books of great value, and a large number of ancient coins and medals, and also Archbishop Engelbert's M. S. copy of the gospels, distinguished by many excellent pictures, a German prayer book, with masterly miniature painting, ten autograph letters of Luther and Ignatius, &c.

Treves was the birth-place of St. Ambrose, and the Alma Mater of St. Jerome.

A pillar of granite stands in the market-place: it is surmounted by a cross, designed to commemorate the appearance of the fiery cross, which tradition tells us, was seen in the sky in 958.

The environs of Treves are charming; many parts are in the style of Swiss landscapes. One of the chief points is Pallien, a village on the left bank of the Moselle, at the mouth of a ravine, up which the road to Aix-la-Chapelle is carried. From this village we behold the most beautiful and picturesque views of the valley and its romantic environs, especially from the archway of a brick bridge thrown over the ravine by Napoleon. From the pretty white house on the height above Pallien, we can enjoy a good view of the abbey of the Moselle and of the city before us.

From Treves a delightful excursion can be made to Igel, a small village six miles distant from the city, on the road to Luxembourg, abounding in remains of antiquity.

Conveyances—Schnellposts daily from Treves to Coblentz in 14 hours; to Luxembourg in 6 hours; to Metz in 15 hours; to Bingen and Aix-la-Chapelle in 19 hours.

Steamboats on the Upper Moselle between Treves, Thurmsmitte, and Metz daily in summer; also to Coblentz daily.

ROUTE 26.

Mayence to Metz.

Distance 46 English miles. Diligence daily, to Kaiserslautern in 34 hours. Railway from thence to Metz.

The road was made by Napoleon to ensure a direct route from Mayence to Paris. At short distances we pass the important villages of Niederohm and Wörrstadt, arriving shortly after at ALZET, a small village with a population of 3,500 inhabitants. It is a very old place, and perhaps of Roman origin. The castle is at present an extensive ruin, was blown down by the French in 1689. We next arrive at Morschheim, a village of 600 inhabitants, where the road leaves Hesse Darmstadt and enters Bavaria and in half an hour after arrives at KIRCHHEIM BOLAND, a village with 3,125 inhabitants, formerly the residence of the Princes of Nassau-Weilberg. The church and family vault of the Princes are worth seeing, and the mountains in the vicinity, especially the slate quarries, are interesting to the mineralogist.

[Six miles from here is The Mount Tonnere, or Donnersberg, frequently ascended from this village. The road winding by the base of the mount conducts us by the right. The mountain, composed of Porphyry, is 2,090 feet above the level of the sea. To the plateau, you ascend in the shade of chestnut trees, and find there a farm house where you can be humbly accommodated, and behold the remains of the great Roman entrenchments, the measurement of which is 12,315 feet. A splendid view can be obtained from the signal tower.]

Quitting Kirchheim Boland, we pass Standelsbühl and Sombach, and reach KAISERLAUTERN, prettily situated between pleasant hills, and containing a population of 8,400 inhabitants. It is a very ancient town and in ruins. The Emperor Barbarossa built there in the twelfth century a castle separated from the town by its fortifications. In the war of the Spanish succession it was destroyed. It is very well situated for trade, and encourages considerable woollen manufactories. It is the seat of the central prison of the Rhenish circle.

Railway to Mannheim, also to Ludwigshafen and to Paris by Homburg, Neunkirchen, Saarbrücken, and Fribach. Landstuhl Station is a small town containing 1,500 inhabitants. The ruined castle of the Counts of Sickingen overhangs the town. It was partly hewn out of the rock, and had walls 24 feet thick. In it the chivalrous Franz von Sickingen lost his life on May 7th, 1523, having been mortally hurt by a falling beam. His bones rest in a vault underneath the high altar of the Roman Catholic Church. Part of his monument, a mutilated statue of a horseman, stands at the bottom of the tower, another piece with the epitaph stands behind the high altar. Quitting Landstuhl the railway proceeds through an interesting country passing Hauptstuhl station, and arrives at HOMBURG, a small town with a population of 2,350 inhabitants. From here omnibuses ply to Zweibrücken in 1½ hours.

Bexbach and Neunkirchen station. At Ren-derlich is the Bavarian frontier. Leaving the Bavarian, we enter the Prussian territory at Saarbrücken.—Immediately after the railway leaves here it arrives at the first French station.

Fribach.—From where a railway leads to Metz. (See Handbook for France.)

(The Rhine continued.)

ROUTE 27.

Mayence to Strasburg.

BY WORMS, MANNHEIM, AND SPIRES.

Above Mayence all, or nearly all, that picturesque beauty which has hitherto characterised the ascent of the Rhine is lost. It no longer flows through scenery interspersed with a thousand charms, and heightened in its fairy beauty, by the history and tradition woven into its texture by the master genius of poetry and romance; but directs its course through a plain, monotonous and dull, undiversified and phlegmatic; without beauty on its borders, or sylvan loveliness on its banks, it might be compared to the prairie of the wilderness, shut up in the craggy ruggedness of barren hills, wild as the distant chains of the Vosges and Hardt on the west, and the Black Forest on the east, which form the boundaries of this flat land.

Steamers twice daily to Mannheim in 8 hours, returning in 4 hours. From Mannheim to Strasburg daily, in 20 hours, calling at Daxlanden, or Leopoldshafen, to drop passengers at Carlsruhe. The steamboat descend from Strasbourg to Mannheim in 7 hours. It is much preferable to travel up by railway, though the fares are double those charged in the steamer. From Mannheim in 12 hours to Mayence, and in two days to Cologne, making Mayence and Mannheim a resting place for the night.

Elzagen daily from Mayence to Mannheim, and thence by rail to Heidelberg. There is no inducement for travellers to follow in a carriage the direct road by the banks of the Rhine, from Spire to Strasbourg. The following route is given for the accommodation of those who make the tour by water.

The low ground of the valley of the Rhine to Switzerland is exceedingly fertile.

Leaving Mayence we proceed by Bodenheim and Laubenheim, along the bank of the Rhine, which is skirted by a succession of sloping hills, planted with vineyards. To the left we see NIERSTEIN, an inconsiderable village, celebrated for its wine, having a population of 2,300 inhabitants. It was already known to the Romans, under the title Aqua Nerl, because of its celebrated mineral spring. It has a chapel worth seeing.

OPPENHEIM is seen to the left. It is a very old town, with a population of 3000 inhabitants, who are chiefly employed in agricultural pursuits, and in the cultivation of their vineyards. It rose under the Carolingians, from a village to an imperial town, which joined the German union. On a hill, to the north-west of the town, is a fine old church, dedicated to St. Catherine, under the imperial ruins of the Castle of Landskron. It was begun in 1262, and finished in 1317. In this church the German ecclesiastical style is seen in its highest beauty. The western part was destroyed in the conflagration of 1689, and is still in ruins. The well preserved painted window, the excellent sculptures, and the tombs of many noble personages, especially the family of Dalberg, deserve being viewed. Older than this, though less remarkable, is the late Lutheran Church, formerly the Parish Church of St. Sebastian, built in the form of a cross. Within the yard of this church is a ruined chapel, filled with the skulls and bones of Swedes and Spaniards, who fell here in the religious war of 1631, when the sacred precepts of the christian code, and the mad doctrines of the incarnate Nazarene, were made subservient to the vile excesses of the wild fanaticism, that with blasphemous lips and sacrilegious hands made war in the name of christianity, staining with crimson gore the snow-white banner of religion, and perverting the first principles of the Gospel to justify a brother's murder.

To the right, a little above Oppenheim, at Erfliden, is the monument, not seen from the steamer, commemorative of the passage of the Rhine by Gustavus Adolphus. It consists of a simple pillar, surmounted by a lion. Tradition informs us that the Swedes crossed the river amid songs and rejoicing, and that their general and king was ferried over on a barn door.

At this spot the road winds very much; and a canal cut through an Isthmus, saves several hours of rowing to the boatmen. The road now leaves the borders of the river. To the right we see GERNSHEIM, a small place with a population of 3000 inhabitants, the birth place of Pierre Schoeffer, the partner of Faust, in the discovery of printing, in whose honour there is a handsome monument, consisting of a colossal statue of sandstone, 22 feet high, erected on the right bank of the Rhine. From here there are omnibuses to Darmstadt. Fare, 30kr.

Conrad, second Duke of Rhenish Franconia, was, in 1024, chosen Emperor of Germany, on the large plain lying between Oppenheim and Gomersblum, a pleasant and rich village, with a population of 3000 souls. The Septs of nearly all Germany met in this place on that occasion. The Rhenish Franks, and the upper and lower Lothoringians encamped on the left; the Saxons, with their neighbours the Sclaves; the East Franks, Bavarians, and Swabians on their right bank, each Sept under the command of their duke. The Emperor was proclaimed from the Königstule, near Lärzweller, above Nackenheim. The route from Oppenheim to Worms, is dreary and uninteresting. About one mile from the Rhine we see Worms, partly concealed from view.

WORMS.—(Hotel: Hotel de la Poste.) The first frontier town of Rhenish Hesse, has a population of about 8,500 souls, 1,000 of which are Jews. It is one of the oldest German towns, was once the imperial free city; contained a population of 30,000, and is eminently distinguished in ancient heroic poetry and history.

two parts. The streets are not named, but distinguished by a figure and a letter. The squares are ornamented with fountains, which want only water, which is very scarce here, to make them useful. The principal curiosities of the place are the Palace, a colossal structure, built of red sandstone, but without any architectural beauty, and only remarkable for its size. It was erected in 1720, by the Elector Palatine, Karl Philip, on the occasion of the removal of his court from Heidelberg to Mannheim. The right wing, used as a theatre, suffered severely from the Austrians in 1795, when they bombarded the city. It has since been repaired. In that bombardment, half the palace was burnt, and only 14 houses remained uninjured. The Austrians threw, on that occasion, into the town, 26,000 cannon balls, and 1780 bombs; it was garrisoned by 4,700 French, who finally surrendered to General Wurms. The Grand Duchess Stephanie inhabits a part of the palace; another wing serves as a Museum, in which is a Gallery of Paintings, containing many excellent productions of the Dutch School; a collection of plaster casts, and a Cabinet of Natural History, together with a considerable library. In 1779, the flower of all the collection at Mannheim were transferred to Munich. Near the palace is the Jesuits Church, an imposing structure. This building is at present occupied by the Lyceum. The library was the property of the late M. Dubellon, and contains many old editions of classic authors, and other typographical curiosities.

The Theatre is a good building, in which Schillers' "Robbers" was first dramatised in 1782. The author lived in the house named Gum Karlsburg, on the Parade Platz. Opposite the grand entrance to the Theatre is Kotzebues house, in which the insane student Sand assassinated the owner. The victim and assassin are buried in the churchyard, outside the Luthern Church.

The Harmony, is a social union, which arose from the amalgamation of the Museum and Casino. This society has a pretty good library, and freely admit strangers. The book and picture shop of Artarid and Fontaine, is one of the best in Germany. English Church service on Sundays.

Schweitzingen.—A pleasant excursion can be made from Mannheim; distant from the palace 9 German miles. It is rather a small town, with 8000 inhabitants. Here the garden is the most remarkable object. It covers a plain of 184 acres, and its vegetation is most luxuriant, though situated on a sandy plain. In it you see the most beautiful and picturesque groups of trees. The most interesting parts of the garden are the Lindnewalk, and the groups of trees in the English garden; the prospect, at the large basin, through the opening in the forest, near Ketz, extending to the Vosgean mountains, the temple of Apollo, which has a peculiar charm when illuminated by the setting sun, the temple of Minerva, the charming bathing house, the splendid landscape round the temple of Mercury, and the Mosque, with its minarets, all presenting the appearance of a beautiful diorama. The tower should be ascended, and a splendid view will be obtained. Your inspection is further invited by the landscape near the birds basin; the botanical garden, which contains 24,000 foreign trees and shrubs, among which is an excellent collection of Alpine plants. The gardens are laid out in the French style, and are peopled with statues, bounded by thorn hedges, and intersected by long avenues. The orangery and conservatories should be visited.

The Château is scarcely worth notice. It was originally a hunting lodge, and is sometimes visited by the Grand Duke. The grounds about are kept in good order. In remote days it was the seat of the Electors Palatine, and 1743, became the summer residence of the Elector, Charles Theodore, who expended vast sums of money in changing a flat sandy plain into an ornamental garden, to enjoy the distinct prospect of a picturesque chain of hills.

CONVEYANCES: Railway to Heidelberg, 16 English miles. Trains in 1 hour to Frankfurt and Carlsruhe, to Baden, Kehl for Strasburg; Freiburg and Baden to Kaiserlautern, Homburg, and Bexbach; Metz and Paris.

Steamboats several times a day to Mayence and Coblenz; and to Strasburg daily.

The traveller would do well to visit Spire from Ludwigshafen as there is no inducement for the traveller by land to follow the Rhine above Mannheim. The tourist going south had better go along the Baden railway to Heidelberg.

From Ludwigshafen to Spire per railway. Quitting this station we see in the distance the castle of Heidelberg on the side of the Kaiserstuhl. Passing Mutterstadt station we reach Schifferstadt where the branch railway to Spire diverges from the line running near to Neustadt, &c. Quitting Schifferstadt by this branch we arrive in a short time at SPIRES.—(Inns: Post, Adler.) An old and venerable city, at one time one of the capitals of Germany, is situated on the Spirebach left bank of the Rhine. It has now a population of 10,500 inhabitants, which at one period amounted to 27,000. It is the seat of the president of the Regency, and of all the supreme boards of administration of the Bavarian circle of the Rhine. It may now however be said that its glory has departed, and at the present day we recognise it only as the shadow of its former self. It was called by the Romans, Civitas Nemetun, and was, we are told by Tacitus, a strong and powerful outpost on the Rhine, used for the purpose of resisting the attacks of the Alemanni, by whom it was repeatedly destroyed, and again rebuilt by the Emperors Constantine and Julianus. It was also the seat of the Germanic diet, and chosen place of residence of the Emperor Charlemagne and his successors, of the Swabian and Franconian lines, and had conferred upon it all the privileges of a free city of the Empire, whereby it became the seat of a flourishing trade, and the emporium of great wealth. Its citizens had conferred on them by Henry V, in 1111, a monopoly of the trade of the Rhine, and had a right to destroy any feudal fortress within three German miles of the gates. During the middle ages imperial fêtes, court magnificence, and citizen violence within and without were alternately the scenes enacted in this city. Frequently engaged in quarrels and feuds with their Emperors and Bishops; they were as skilled in the use of arms as of mechanics or the instruments of their trade. Armies oftentimes of 20,000 men, raised by the feudal barons, whose rapacity and pillage they punished by burning his castle to the ground, besieged the city of Spire, but were as often repulsed by the citizens, who, when not victorious had to suffer much misery and spoliation of property from the inroads of these plundering armies.

The city also maintained in the fourteenth century an army of knights and soldiers for its defence and war purposes, and only settled into quiet in 1530, when an Imperial writ abolished the right of war, and restored peace to Germany. Spire was for more than two centuries, the seat of the Reichs-Kammergericht or Imperial Chamber, by which legislative enactments were enforced, and their violations punished. After the devastations committed by the hordes of Louis XIV., it was removed to the Wetslar, in 1688. Its trade and prosperity began to wane in the seventeenth century, but did not go down altogether until destroyed in the war of succession, during which the greatest atrocities were perpetrated by the French, who took the town in 1689, and issued one of the most barbarous proclamations on record, whereby the citizens with their families were ordered to emigrate within six days to Alsace, Louvaine, or Burgundy, and prohibiting them under pain of death from crossing the Rhine. At the day named in the proclamation the wretched inhabitants were driven from the city at the beat of drum, and were followed by the French soldiery, who had plundered the houses and churches of everything valuable. The town was left to the sole occupation and mercy of the executioners, who, headed by the Provost-marshal, entered the town with a gallows on the day the proclamation was issued, carrying about with them the emblems of their profession.

By orders of the French general Montclair, the town was set fire to, and in a few hours, Spire, with its 47 streets, churches, houses, and edifices sent forth one unbroken blaze, that illumined the distant horizon, and furiously penetrated into the most cherished recesses of that city, now abandoned to the destroying element. Nor did the work end here, for after a conflagration of three days and three nights, it was found that monuments, fountains, and many houses were still not altogether destroyed, therefore mines were sprung, and these classic monuments of antiquity were rudely blown into atoms. The venerated shrine of religion, beneath whose vaulted pavement were mouldering in clay, the dissolved ashes of royal personages and imperial governors, and within whose shrines were reposing, the venerated reliques consecrated by superstitious piety as things holy and mystical, were dismantled, its sanctuary violated, the portal of its tabernacle broken into fragments and the graves and tombs beneath its roof torn open, and their contents, the bones of emperors and heroes scattered to the winds. Years rolled by and Spires still lay in ruins, but even the rubbish of its once proud monuments spoke eloquently, and from the depths of their desolation issued a voice, appealing to the citizen love and patriotism of her exiled children or their descendants, who once sat beneath the shadow of her wings. They returned to the home of their early days or maturer years, each fragment of the ruined city had an attraction for their enthusiasm, the foundations of their homes were sought out, and in time Spires again existed, but only as the shadow of its former self. Cycles of years have gone by, and during their transit, provinces have been raised to empires, and empires reduced to provinces, but Spires has not yet raised its head.

But even the skeleton of this once great town was not yet exempt from the sanguinary horrors of war, for in 1794, the revolutionary army under Custine took it, and repeated all the atrocity of 1689. In 1816 Spires was ceded to the king of Bavaria. In the interval up to this time, much has been done to repair the injuries inflicted on it by war.

The Cathedral was founded in 1027, by Conrad the Salic, as a burying place for himself and his successors. After his death, his son Henry III. diligently continued the building, and on his death in 1056, bequeathed to his son and successor, Henry IV., the completion of this splendid edifice, which was finished in 1097. Its site had been previously occupied by a Roman temple of Venus, and afterwards by a christian temple, erected by Dagobert II. A fire in 1450 completely destroyed in a few hours the work which it took three generations to perfect, and we see in the present structure, not the original edifice of 1027, but the one erected after 1450, in which the peaked steeples, the eastern cupola, and the round tower are the only remains of the ancient cathedral discernible. This noble edifice again suffered from the French in 1609, who, though they had promised to respect it, and thereby caused the citizens to fill it with all their valuables, yet plundered it and burned all that was consumable in the west end cupola, nave, and choir. These Gallic barbarians also mined and endeavoured to blow it up, but were unsuccessful in all their efforts to accomplish their purpose. The last prince bishop of Bruchsal and Spires caused this cathedral to be restored in 1772, but gave it, facing the town, a front of pyramids, entirely foreign to its general style of architecture. During the revolutionary war in 1794, the interior decorations, sculpture, carving, &c., were destroyed by the French. Since 1819 it had been undergoing repairs, and had expended upon it 101,000*fl.* inclusive of 17,320*fl.* for bells. At present it is restored again to its original designation and has become an episcopal cathedral, re-opened for public worship in 1824. Its exterior is modelled in what architects call the "severe style," and is remarkably devoid of ornament, but the height and width of the nave is awful to contemplate. Between the nave and the choir is the imperial vault, in which were buried eight emperors of Germany, whose remains were scattered by the French. The principal monument worth notice is that of Adolphus of Nassau, by Ohmacht, consisting of a Byzantine sarcophagus, on which is a kneeling figure of the emperor in armour. This monument has been erected by the duke of Nassau, and there is another to the memory of Rudolph of Hapsburgh, by king Louis of Bavaria, executed by Schanthalier. The other objects of attraction are Schrandolph's frescos, the best modern works in Germany; the crypt, in which are seen the original grave-stone of Rudolph of Hapsburgh, bearing his effigy, and traces of the missal sprung by the French, when they unsuccessfully attempted to blow up the cathedral; Schlesinger's copy of the Madonna, by Raphael de St. Liza; a set of priest's robes of the 18th century, beautifully embossed and ornamented, in the sacristy. On the north side of the building you see the ruins of St. Africa's chapel, where lay unburied for five years, the remains of Henry II. until the papal excommunication pronounced against him when living had been removed, and his ashes permitted a resting-place in the imperial vault. In the centre gallery, encircling the cathedral, there is a fine prospect of Heidelberg, Mannheim, the Hartz mountains, &c., and the town itself is surrounded by beautiful pleasure-grounds, stretching along the Rhine.

In the north-east side of the Hall of Antiquities, which contains the remains of Roman antiquities, statues, altars, coins, votive tablets, sword-blades, and a bronze statue of Mercury, the eagle of the Roman legion, and sculptures, representing scenes from the Passion, with engravings of the Mount of Olives. The only remains of the Ritscher, in which 29 diets were held, is a broken wall, adjoining the Protestant church (built in 1717). The protest of the princes and cities against the decree of the diet which was held here in 1529, originated the name Protestant. There exists in Spire a Harmony, a club to which travellers may be admitted, on being introduced, to read the newspapers.

From here a good road leads to Landau and to the castle of Trifels, the prison of Richard Cœur de Lion.

(Voyage up the Rhine, from Spire, continued.)

Quitting Spire we continue our voyage up the Rhine, and on our right, pass Phillipsburg, built between 1568 and 1571, by Philip Von Sotern, archbishop of Spire, after whom it is named. It was once an imperial fortress, but was demolished in 1800. Below the level of the Rhine, fetid and unsalubrious morasses over-spread the country. Proceeding on we are attracted by the sight of GERMERSHEIM, on the left, where there is a bridge of boats, connecting it with the opposite bank of the Rhine. The town was founded by Rudolph of Hapsburg, who granted to it all the privileges possessed by the free imperial town of Spire. This celebrated emperor died here in 1291. The German Confederation have, since 1834, greatly strengthened it and converted it into a fortress. It is a dirty, miserable hole of a place, and the traveller would find himself much disappointed were he to disembark and pay it a visit. A road to Alsace and Switzerland passes through it, connected with the opposite bank of the Rhine by the bridge of boats previously alluded to. The next place seen on the left is Lauterberg, where the Lauter joins the Rhine, and separates Alsace and the Palatinate. Further on, to the right, we see the pretty village of Leopoldshafen, formerly known as the village of Shrock. This village, though handsome and picturesque, is yet devoid of all accommodation for travellers. Passengers for Carlsruhe (four miles distant) are landed at Knielingen (Inn, Zum Rheinbad), a small village to the right, where we see a bridge of boats. Close by is the villa of Margrave Max of Baden. Along the territories of Darmstadt and Baden the right bank of the Rhine is lined with stone dykes for protecting the bank, by this means upwards of 100,000 acres of land have been gained, which grows rich and luxuriant meadows. To the right we see, six miles Baden-baden, the village of Iffstaheim; and on the left the fortress of St. Louis, raised by Vauban, and destroyed by the Austrians, in 1793. On a sunny day, when the atmosphere is clear, we can see, though 27 miles off, the spire of Strasburg. In this part of the course of the Rhine it is said that gold is found among the gravel and stones.

Strasburg.—HOTELS:

The Hotel de Paris deserves our best recommendation: landlord, Mr. Diemer.
Hotel de la Fleur, quiet and reasonable.
Hotel de la Maison Rouge, comfortable and moderate: landlord, Mr. Caspari

Strasburg is a powerful frontier fortress, situated on the Ill, which intersects the town in all directions, and contains a population of 68,200 inhabitants and a garrison of 6,000 men. The Ill and Breuch unite near the Weissen Thore (white gate). It has 260 streets, inclusive of 14 larger and smaller public thoroughfares. The streets are mostly narrow, and the houses high, whilst on every side we see the traces of an imperial German town, which Strasburg yet preserves, notwithstanding that it has been united to France for nearly two centuries. It is now the chief town of the Department du Bas Rhin, and was formerly a free imperial city of the German empire. Louis XIV., in 1681, attacked, took, and annexed it to his kingdom at a time when he had not even the plea of warfare for so doing, he being at profound peace with the kingdom. It capitulated, and thus preserved many of its ancient rights and privileges. Its origin may be traced to the most remote times—to the epoch a.c. when inhabited by the ancient Celts, who were superseded by the Romans, and hence it is called the Argentoratum of the Romans, which was destroyed by the invading barbarians in the 5th century, and rebuilt by the Franks in the 8th, and from that period called Stratoborgum or Strasburg.

Cathedral or Minister, an edifice ranking foremost among the European specimens of Gothic architecture. The first Cathedral was built by Louis I., about 510, and a choir was added by Charles the Great; but in 1007 the building was reduced to ashes by lightning, and the foundation of a new Cathedral was laid in 1015, by Bishop Werner, of the house of Hapsburgh, which was finished in 1275. Its spire is the highest in the world, being 463 feet from the pavement, 24 feet higher than the great pyramid of Egypt, and 160 feet higher than St. Paul's, London. Its erection was commenced in 1276, after a design by the great artist, Erwin of Steinbach, who was entrusted with the execution of the work. However, the steeple of the north side only was finished, and the other rises very little above the roof. Erwin died in 1318, and his son John continued the building up to the flat roof, and his daughter Sabina ornamented the great portal. This family of architects are buried within the Cathedral. The tower was not completed until 1432, when it was finished by a Cologne artist, John Hültz, who was brought to Strasburg, for this purpose. Worth seeing, and will well repay a minute inspection are the three western portals, whose sculptures were effaced during the "reign of terror," in 1793, but since restored after the old models, the vast and beautiful window over the portal. It is 43 feet in diameter, and composed of rich painted glass, the beautiful font of 1453, in the north transept, and the pulpit of carved stone, 1416, and the large choir with the high altar, and below, in the holy sepulchre, the tombs of John Geller, of Kalsersberg, of Konrad II., that of Mantelin, the first printer of Strasburg, and these of Erwin and his children. The clock, however, is the most remarkable thing connected with this Cathedral. It is a complete astronomical Almanac, from which you can read the revolutions of the heavenly bodies, and the various phenomena which they exhibit. It has three departments; the first is astronomical, the second ecclesiastical, indicating the fasts and holydays of the Roman Catholic church, and the third office of the automaton is a moral and religious one.

An easy ascent may be made to the platform, two-thirds of the way up; and if an ascent should be wished to the summit, the watchman, who resides in this station, will, if the parties have obtained the mayor's permission, unlock the iron grate enclosing the passage, and accompany the adventurer to the top. To a person of ordinary nerve there is no danger in ascending it. The ascent will be well repaid by the pleasure derived, from a minute inspection of the exquisitely wrought tracery, the delicately light and magnificently chiselled angles and ornaments, and the splendidly chiselled pillars supporting the open stone work, resembling bars of iron, leading one to believe himself in a net suspended between Earth and Heaven. The winding stair terminates under a species of carved work. The view from the top embraces the city, the Black Forest in Germany, the Vosges Mountains, and the Rhine district; but it is the exploit, and the height that will repay, more than the prospect, the adventurous climber.

The Church of St. Thomas is used for the celebration of the Protestant services. It contains the magnificent tomb of Marahal Baete, executed in marble, by Pagalle, and looked upon as one of his masterpieces. It is plain, though beautiful; and was erected to the Marahal's memory by Louis XV. It represents a beautiful female figure, endeavouring to stay the advance of death, and to detain the general, who appears descending calmly and with dignity to the grave.

In this church also, are the monuments of Schöpflin, by Peters, erected by his sister, of Oberlin, executed by Ohnmacht's masterly chisel. In a vault beneath the church are some preserved corpses, two of which are said to be the bodies of a Count of Nassau Sasrwarden and his daughter, buried upwards of a century.

The Academie Royale, founded in 1588, and erected with a university in 1621, was formerly a Protestant school. The University was suppressed at the revolution. It was the Alma Mater of several eminent scholars, among whom rank as the most remarkable Schweighäuser, Oberlin, Schöpflin, &c.; Goethe, also, completed his studies here, and in 1772 took his degree of Doctor in Laws. In it is the Museum of Natural History, containing a very select and valuable collection of fossils, &c. In the botanical collection is the trunk of a silver fir, which was 8 feet in diameter, and 150 feet high.

The Public Library, near the new church, contains 100,000 volumes, and very many literary curiosities, comprising the Landsberg Manual of Herrade, Abbes of Hohenberg, richly illuminated.

ated in the early Byzantine style (1180) a Missal; in silver letters, on purple vellum, and many books of the earliest date of printing. A collection of ancient coins is also connected with it; and there is contiguous to it an observatory.

The Theatre, a magnificent building at the extremity of the beautiful promenade le Broglu. The entrance is adorned with six Ionian columns, surmounted by the muses, the whole being an execution by Obenacht.

The principal promenade is the Ruprechtsau, beyond the walls. The city gates are closed each evening at 10 o'clock, after which there is no egress or ingress.

In the centre of the Palace d'Armes, is a vault, beneath which repose the ashes of General Kleber, to whose memory a monument is erected over the vault.

The Arsenal will repay a visit to those interested in military armaments. It contains fire arms for 155,000 men, 952 pieces of cannon. There is also a large cannon foundry, and the country around the city, between the Ill and the Rhine, can be laid under water, thereby rendering the fortress almost impregnable.

The Synagogue, a new building, erected in 1834, by the children of the Hebrew race, who were at one time cruelly persecuted and inhumanly tortured in this city. On the spot where now stands the Prefecture, over 2000 of the persecuted race were burned in a bonfire, by people calling themselves christians, but whose christianity was nothing more or less than a hollow mockery and miserable imposture.

A bronze statue, near the Cathedral, commemorates the memory of Peter Schöffin, who assisted Gutenberg in his discovery of printing. In the Palace of Gutenberg is a statue to the memory of the latter, who made his first attempt at printing in Strasburg, and brought it to perfection at Mayence.

Strasburg is favourably situated for commerce, the Rhine connecting it with Switzerland, Holland, and Belgium: its chief exports are corn, flax, hemp, wine and spirits, linen, sail-cloth, blankets, carpets, hardware, leather, cotton, lace, tobacco, and snuff.

Strasburg and Paris Railway: From Strasburg to Paris in 14 hours. Diligences to Lyons in 7 hours; to Landau in 12½ hours. Railway to Basle, (see Hand-book for France;) from Kehl to the Great Baden railway, to Sarrebong.

Steamers Daily to Mannheim and Mayence. From Strasburg to Mayence, the journey is made nearly as quick by water as by rail, viz 6½ hours, but it takes two long days to accomplish the journey up from Mayence.

A new canal opens into the Rhine below the bridge of Kehl, connecting it with the Ill. By means of this canal, steamboats, &c. are enabled to penetrate into the heart of Strasburg. As we enter, the Spire presents a beautiful appearance, and ought to command the attention of the tourist. Two miles above the canal is the bridge of boats connecting Germany with France

ROUTE 28.

Frankfort to Basle.

BY DARMSTADT, HEIDELBERG, CARLSRUHE, AND FREIBURG.

RAILWAY: Frankfort to Heidelberg or Mannheim in three hours, by the Main Nekur Eisenbahn; distance 46½ English miles.

Heidelberg to Halingen, four miles from Basle, 15½ English miles, in nine hours, by the Badinhe Staatsbad.

The railway quitting the terminus at Frankfort, situated inside the Gallus Thor, crosses the Main by means of a recently constructed bridge, and passes the height or the left, on the eminence of which we see the Watch-tower of Sachsenhausen, the prospect from which embraces a splendid view over Frankfort, the Main, and the distant Taunus rendered more picturesque and charming by the vineyards and sweet villas scattered over the immediate foreground.

The railway to Offenbach branches off at Sachsenhausen. (For further particulars see Bradshaw's Continental Guide).

LANGEN Station: Leaving this place our route is through a flat and uninteresting country up to Darmstadt. Before our arrival at this place we pass the unimportant station of Arheilgen.

Darmstadt.—Inns:

Hotel des Ralsins; landlord, Mr. Frisch.
Hotel de Kohler, near the Railway Station.
Hotel Darmstadter Hof.

Darmstadt the residence of the Grand Duke of Hesse, the capital of the Grand Duchy and the seat of government, and of the supreme chamber, leans eastward, and is of rural scenery and picturesque neatness. Among the principal is the Linden Walk, without the Rhinegate; the road to the Grosse Voos, or large pond; to the Brunen, three walls, beautifully situated in a wood; to the Carlshof, the seat of the late Baron Barkhausen, open to the public all the year round; to the Fasanery (pheasant preserve); and to the Kranichstein, an old hunting seat, where wild boars are kept for the ducal chase.

Eisenagen twice daily to Mayence, at 6 a.m. and 4 p.m., by Gross-gerau, crossing by a ferry opposite Castel. Distance, 4½ German miles, or 18 miles English, in 3½ hours.

Leaving the last station, the railway directs its course to EBERSTADT.—A small village on the Modan-Brook, the seat of various kinds of industry. Quitting Eberstadt we see a short distance off, the ruins of the castle of Frankenstein on the left.

Close to this station and some miles south of Darmstadt commences the picturesque district called the Odenwald or forest of Odin. It lies on the road to Heidelberg, east of the railway, and on the way to the last mentioned place some of its most interesting scenery may be visited, particularly the ascent of the Melibocus, which ought not to be omitted by any, even though their convenience did not permit a visit to the entire. A mountainous road through the centre of the Odenwald leads from Darmstadt to Heidelberg. Brensbach, Erbach, and Hirschhorn are the stations. Michelstadt is a good halt, but the accommodation is so bad that the traveller had better proceed and not stop. The entire distance is 59 English miles. From Darmstadt to Heidelberg, the railway directs its course for the greater part of the way by the old post road, remarkable for its picturesque beauty and agreeable scenery. This road is called the Bergstrasse, from the mountains at the foot of which it runs, for it is perfectly level itself. It is beautiful in the brilliant aspect, presented by cultivated fertility and luxuriant vegetation, distinguishing the district it overlooks, and enlivened by the glimpses of the sparkling Rhine, seen at times through its dim limits, bounded by the outlines of the Vosges mountains in France. To the left we see the boundary of the Odenwald, a chain of mountains wooded and vine-clad, bearing a ruined castle of feudal ages on their frowning brows. A short distance to the right, and running parallel with the rail-road, to which it is close, stretches in giant-like dimensions, a vast sandy plain, intersected by the meandering Rhine, and having for its remote boundaries, the lofty heights of Mount Tonnerre and the Vosges, at a distance of more than five English miles. At the base of the mountains we see beautifully and grandly located towns and villages, canopied by the overhanging vine-clad slopes, and embowered within orchards, which form delightful avenues or walks between the towns and villages.

ZWINGENBERG.—(Inn: Löwe), a cheerful country town with a population of 1,500, situated immediately under the sylvan Melibocus—visitors to which, should leave the railway here, and procure refreshments at the inn below, as none can be got on the top. The excursion can be made in from six to seven hours, which are occupied in the entire excursion to the Melibocus, Felsberg, Felsenmeer, and by the valley of Schönbach, back to Auerbach and Zwingenberg. The keys of the tower, kept at Auerbach and at Alsbach, should be asked for before starting. From the tower only can be got a commanding view of the Odenwald and its hills clofued with forests.

The Melibocus or Malchen is a hill of granite, conically shaped, and is the highest of the Odenwald chain, being 1,632 Paris feet above the level of the sea. On its loftiest summit is a white tower, erected in 1772, which attracts attention for miles on every side. A grand view can be enjoyed from this Belvidere. At a remote distance to the left, Spires, and Mannheim with its slated dome are dimly shadowed forth, opposite which are brightly reflected, Worms and its gothic cathedral, with the gloomy towers of Mayence frowning beneath and further down. The Tower is situated on the declivity of the hill and commands a view of the hamlets and gardens of the Bergstrasse, the course of the Rhine, and its waters sparkling in the golden glare of a noon-day sun, during a course of over sixty miles from Mannheim to Bingen, until it is lost in the deep recesses of the mountains of the Rheingau, which form the boundary of the view on that side. We also can distinguish the Neckar, as it flows smoothly along and its confluence with the Rhine. The tower of the Strasbourg cathedral, 100 miles distant, can be distinguished on a clear day, if a telescope be brought to bear on it. Northwards you see at a distance of 81 miles, the mountains near Glemmen in Hesse, and on the east the Odenwald greets the eye, over whose forest heights the prospect ranges as far as Würzburg, and on the west, the view stretches across the Rhine until intercepted by the slate-coloured peaks of the Vosges and Mount Tonnerre, 10 miles off.

Tourists wishing to extend their journey through the Odenwald, continue the excursion by a path leading to the Felsberg Mount of Rocks, 1546 feet high and surmounted by a hunting lodge, commanding a noble prospect. It is separated from the Melibocus by one of the greenest valleys in the district. Close to the Jägerhaus, a hunting lodge, and by the path side, leading to Reichenbach, we meet the Riesenstein, a column 30 feet long and 4 feet in diameter, and composed of hard syenite, closely resembling the rock constituting the mountain. Close to this is the Riesenstein, a rocky altar composed of the same material. The origin of these have not been ascertained, and it becomes a matter of much curiosity to learn under what circumstances these trophies of human power were erected in a far remote sequestered forest. Various surmises have been hazarded on the subject, but the most plausible are, that they are ruins of works by Roman artificers, when established in this part of Germany, comprised in the Agri decumates. Others contend that they are of German origin, and were originally designed to form part of the materials for a temple to Odin. It was once thought to remove them, for the purpose of incorporating them in the erection of a column on the field of Leipzig, to commemorate the victory. We next see the Felsenmeer (sea of rocks,) a vast accumulation of rocks, extending almost from the summit of the Felsberg to Reichenbach, and looking as if vomited out of some chasm by nature, in one of her dreadful convulsions. At this point two ways, by which to return, are before us. One by Reichenbach and Auerbach to Zwingenberg station, or from Auerbach by a pretty fair road, through Schönberg, Reichenberg, the hill of Winterkasten and Reichelsheim to Erbach (where is a poor inn, the Zum Odenwald) a small but pretty village, with 1000 inhabitants, situated in a valley. Its old church, containing the tombs of the Knights of Allendorf, is worth seeing.

The Castle of the Counts of Erbach, will attract attention. It stands on the site of an old heronial residence, which has fallen into ruins and been destroyed, except the donjon tower, in which is an armoury deeply interesting, because of the historical association connected with each armour in its collection. Among the most interesting are the suits worn by Philip of Burgundy, called the "Good" Frederick III., Maximilian the 1st of Austria, Gian Giacomo Medici, Margrave Albert, of Brandenburg, Gustavus Adolphus, and Wallenstein. The suits of the two latter personages, were originally in the arsenal at Nuremberg, as likewise many others in the lot. To each suit is attached some history; some are arranged on horseback, and others on foot, as after the fashion of a tournament. Various indeed are the histories, as were the pursuits and destinies of their owners, some of whom were robber knights that expiated their evil deeds on the scaffold. In the chapel will be seen the coffins in which reposed the remains of Charlemagne's son-in-law and secretary, Eginhard, and his faithful wife Emma. These interesting memorials of the dead were transferred in 1810, from the church at Seligenstadt, to their present resting place. The Castle itself will be found to contain several other interesting curiosities in the shape of painted glass, antiques, vases, firearms, the panoply of Franz, of Sickingen, of Götz, of Berlichingen, a small suit made for Thomele, the dwarf of the Archduke Ferdinand of Austria; the iron hand from Hellbrunn, &c.

An excellent post road connects Erbach with Darmstadt, and is carried through a very agreeable and picturesque country, for the entire distance of 3½ German miles. Tourists can also go from Erbach to Heidelberg, by Beerfelden and Eberbach, on the Neckar, and descend the river and proceed on by the banks.

The Castle of Rodenstein with whose history is identified the legend of the wild huntsman, who flies through the air with a bolsterous retinue on the eve of war, is a modern edifice, surrounded by forests, situated in a singularly wild mountain district, 9 miles north-west from Erbach, midway between Reichelsheim and Birstein. From Reichelsheim, by Fürth, a road leads to Weinheim Station on the Bergstrasse, along by which from Darmstadt to the latter place, the railway runs parallel. At Weinheim, it diverges to cross the Neckar, at Ladenburg, a short distance from which it joins the Odine, between Mannheim and Heidelberg midway.

AUERBACH Station.—(Inns: Krone and Rose) is situated on the left of the road, in a beautiful and picturesque neighbourhood. It is a large and prosperous village, with a mineral spring. Travellers would do well to make an excursion from this place, which can be done in a light car, to the Castle of Auerberg, two miles from the village. It leads to the Melibocus, by a shady and agreeable path.

The Landberg is situated south of Auerbach, It consists of a mound or small hill in the centre of a field, and is remarkable as having been the place which in ancient times the Burggraves of Starkenberg held the Gaugerecht, a species of court.

BENSHEIM Station.—(Hotel Sonne) is a small town full of industry and commerce. This and its situation on the slope of vine hills, together with the character of antiquity displayed in the architecture of the houses, the ruined and broken up fortifications, the high walls and turrets, and deep moats imparts to the little town a peculiar charm.

The Abbey of Lorsch lies about three miles west of Bensheim, and is one of the oldest gothic ruins in this portion of Germany. The original church was consecrated in 774, in presence of Charlemagne and his family, and a fragment of its portico still remains. In the other portions of the building we distinguish the debased Roman style of the eleventh century. A portion of it is now used as a fruit store house. A number of cloisters were founded by this Abbey which soon became rich and powerful, and the country all round owes to it much of its civilisation, it having been reclaimed from a barren wilderness to a state of high cultivation. Within this Abbey died, with the monk's cowl, the Duke Thassilo of Bavaria, deposed for treason by Charlemagne.

HIPPENHEIM Station.—(Inns, Halber Mond) agreeably situated, but presenting a decayed appearance. The church was built by Charlemagne. It contains a good painting of the Saviour. A charming mountain rises beyond the town, formerly called Berkhelden, luxuriously planted with vines and fruit trees. An easy path winds round it to the ruins of the castle of Starkenberg, built in 1,064, by the Abbots of Lorsch, as a defence against the attacks of the German Emperors. It afterwards fell into the hands of the Archbishop of Mayence, who garrisoned it and prized it as an invaluable strong hold. It was the object of several sieges by the Spaniard, Swedes, and French. A picturesque garden surrounds the ruins.

A post now takes the traveller from Hippenheim to Worms, 2½ German miles distance, by Lorsch and Birstadt. The railway on quitting Hippenheim at a short distance leaves the territory of Darmstadt, and enters that of Baden.

HEINSBACH Station: Close by here is the country residence of M. Rothschild of Frankfort. In this neighbourhood he has very large estates.

WEINHEIM Station.—Inns:

Hotel Der Karlsberg.

Pfälzer Hof.

Weinheim is a small town with a population of 5,000 inhabitants, built in an amphitheatrical form, against the bosom of a mount. In every portion of the town you discern traces of high antiquity; and close by is grown the best wine of the Bergstrasse, of which the country around is the most fertile and finest spot. The castle of Windeck which lies behind the town on a vine-hill, affords a beautiful prospect, and is remarkable for its donjon tower of cylindrical form. Weinheim also has six churches, situated on a beautiful eminence, and an hospital.

Quitting the last station the railway bends towards the south west, leaving the Bergstrasse, and taking a direct course to the Neckar.

LADENBURG Station: The oldest town in this part of the Rhenish Palatinate, probably the Leopedeum of the Romans, situated on the bank of the Neckar, where it makes a fine appearance with its gothic turrets, its church of St. Gallus, and high town walls. Its population exceeds 2,500 souls.

FRIEDRICHSFELD: equally distant from Mannheim and Heidelberg, and the junction of their railways. Two miles off are Swetzingen gardens. To the left, rising on an eminence you see the castle of Strahlenberg, elevated above Schreiselheim. Travelling on we perceive Heidelberg as we get opposite it, HEIDELBERG Station: Quarter of a mile outside the Klingel Thor.

A walk of half hour leads you from the Klingel Thor along the in the side of the town wall to the castle, returning into the Karlsplatz by the path leading downwards, and back to the railway station through the town.

Heidelberg, Inns:

Hotel Prince Charles, first-rate and excellent, and close to the castle.

Hotel de Hollande, a very comfortable and highly respectable hotel, beautifully situated on the banks of the Neckar, quiet and moderate. Mr. Spitz, proprietor.

Hotel Adler, or Eagle, a very comfortable house, next to the castle. The charges are moderate, and it is deservedly recommended.

The Court of Baden Hotel, first-rate good house, but not dear.

Baierischer Hof (Bavarian Hotel), near the two Railway Stations, and the Post-office.

Müller's Private Family Hotel is most respectable, and deservedly recommended.

Heidelberg is situated at the entrance of the charming valley of the Neckar, on the left bank, between the river and the castle rock, and contains a population of 15,200 souls, half of whom profess the Roman Catholic faith. The town itself consists of one street, extending from the railway station to the Heilbrunn-gate, a distance of three miles. This city has suffered more from the horrors of war than perhaps any other in Europe. At one period, before the thirty years war, it was the seat of splendour, of vast commercial palaces, and all the other great appendages characterising a prosperous commercial city. It was also the residence of the Electors Palatine of the Rhine. War has destroyed all these monuments of its once great prosperity, and left it nothing to boast of but the shred of its once proud and imperial magnificence. It has been five times bombarded, twice reduced to ashes, and thrice taken by assault and delivered over to pillage. In 1622. Tilly took the town by storm after a cruel siege and bombardment of one month, and gave it up for three days to his ruffian soldiers to pillage. He is said to have littered his cavalry with the books and manuscripts from the library of the elector, one of the most valuable in Europe. The imperial troops held possession of the place for eleven years succeeding, when it was retaken by the Swedes, who proved scarcely better friends than its imperial foes. The ambition of Louis XIV. was more tremendously destructive than any former foe had been, and two French armies the first in 1674, the second in 1693, crossed the Rhine, carrying fire, slaughter, and famine in their train. Though Heidelberg was taken and burned by Melan, 1688, it was in the siege of 1693, under Chamilly, that the French exercised a fiendish cruelty and merciless atrocity that in the annals of warfare remains unparalleled, save by the Reign of Terror in the French Revolution, and which to this day causes in the Palatinate the name of Frenchmen to be execrated. Whether by cowardice or treachery, the castle to which the citizens repaired for refuge, was betrayed and entered by the victorious fiends, before whose licentious depravity and cruel barbarian virtue was trampled into atoms after being sacrificed and debased, and the holiest memorials of manhood desecrated by military brutality. In this carnage no mercy was shewn the Protestants.

The University is one of the most ancient in Germany, and was founded in 1386. It is frequented by 700 or 800 students, and has sent forth some distinguished members of the schools of law and medicine, and can boast of the following great names:—Gmelin, illustrious in natural history and chemistry; Tiedemann, in anatomy; Paulus, in theology, and Mittermeyer, in criminal law. This palace of literature served as a silent retreat for Gervinus and Schlosser. As an architectural structure the building cannot boast of any attraction. Its library contains 120,000 volumes, independent of manuscripts. Of the celebrated Bibliotheca Palatina, 890 manuscripts, which were carried off to Rome and placed in the Vatican, were restored in 1815 by Pope Pius VII. The most eminent curiosities in the collection are a Codex of the Greek Anthology; of manuscripts of Plutarch and Thucydides, and many valuable autographs; the following works of Luther—manuscript translation of Isaiah; Exhortation to Prayer against the Turks, and a copy of the Heidelberg Catechism, annotated by him, and several other works. Except on Sundays the library is open from 2 to 4, daily.

The Physical and Zoological Museums are placed in a building, formerly a Dominican convent, situated in the suburbs.

The Museum Club, opposite to the University upon the late Parade, contains a good reading room, a ball and concert halls.

VIEW OF VIENNA

The public buildings and houses of this city as we now see them, gives us but a faint idea of its former grandeur, and we could but distinguish one house among the entire, which might be fairly styled the representative of former architectural eminence. It is the inn Zum Ritter, situated in the Market Place, near the Church of the Holy Ghost. Its structure dates from 1592, and it is surmounted by the statue of a knight, and in its richly decorated façade, ornamented with images, heraldic devices, &c, may give the tourist some idea of the character of Heidelberg's architecture, in the days of her ancient greatness.

The Church of the Holy Ghost.—In this edifice are entombed the ashes of many of the electors and Counts Palatine of Germany. All the magnificent monuments formerly erected in it, were destroyed or mutilated by the French, in 1793. This church has also been the subject of a long contest between the Protestant and Roman Catholic sects, both claiming possession of it, for the purposes of public worship. This dispute was terminated by its being equally divided between both; and now, beneath the same roof, are celebrated the service of Rome, in all the grandeur of its mystic and ceremonial pomp, and the liturgy of the Reformed Church in the purity of its unadulterated simplicity. And by it a beautiful lesson of christian charity is taught to the factious contentionists, who, in the bitterness of their fanaticism, forget that though kneeling at different altars, and worshipping by different rites, it is but the one God they venerate, and that charity is the foundation of all religion. And it is worthy of record, that the Electoral Court was removed from Heidelberg to Mannheim by one of the electors, in consequence of a quarrel with the townspeople, who resisted his attempt to deprive the Protestants of this privilege, though he offered to build them a church of their own. Doubtless the English tourists will think it an extraordinary thing,—a strange tale.—Catholics and Protestants worshipping in the same church; and yet they will meet with other instances of the same kind, both in Germany and Switzerland; and thus from that land, where Luther translated the scriptures, intolerance and bigotry have been banished.

Church of St. Peter.—This fine old church cannot fail to attract the tourist, because of its antiquity and memorable historical tradition; connected with the fact of Jerome of Prague, the companion of Huss, having attached to its door his celebrated theses—an exposition and defence of the reformed doctrines, which he preached upon and maintained to a multitude of hearers assembled in the church yard. Here, likewise we see, simple as beautiful, the tomb of that wonderful woman, Olimpia Moreta, who to the exalted grace and rich beauty of a woman, added the intellectual greatness and learning of a philosopher. Driven from her own sunny land where persecution followed her steps as a heretic she was forced to fly Italy, and together with her German husband, settled in a house at Heidelberg where she delivered brilliant courses of lectures to crowded and applauding audiences. As we look upon her grave, and recall her memory, we cannot fail to be deeply interested by the recollection of her more than earthly style of beauty; her misfortunes, literary acquirements, and early death, all of which conspire to illumine her tomb and sanctify her ashes with a brightening halo of peculiar interest.

The Castle is finely situated on a rock overlooking the Neckar, and its beautiful and fertile valley. It looks an imposing ruin, exhibiting the twofold character of a fortress and a palace, and was in remote days the residence of the Electors Palatine. This venerable ruin so varied in its styles of architecture representing the tastes of several centuries, so highly interesting in the combined details of its history and chequered fortunes, and so beautifully attractive by its picturesque situation, has been thrice burnt, and devastated on ten occasions by the horrors and barbarism of war, which however did not destroy its vastness, nor the relics of its architectural grandeur. Its ultimate ruin was accomplished in 1764, when it was struck by lightning and burnt to the ground. It is now roofless and but a collection of red stone walls. It is approached by a steep and strong ascent, winding on the side of the Neckar, and by a carriage road from the rise. The Electors Bardolph and Rupert are said to have been the founders of the oldest part of the building. It still exhibits the appearance of a fortress of the feudal ages, and from beneath the archway we get our first view the teeth of the Fortoullis. The Friedrichsbau, built in the early part of the seventeenth century, and probably named after the Elector Frederick who erected it, is richly decorated, and the façade to the south of the inner court of the building is adorned with statues, finished as exquisitely as though the artist had to work from Carrara marble instead of the red stone (keuper) of the mountains of Germany. This part of the building of the Elizabethan style, overhangs the river, and extends along the east side of the quadrangle built by Otto Henry in 1556. The English traveller must be deeply interested by the round tower, in which were the apartments of Elizabeth of England, daughter of James I., and grand daughter of Mary Queen of Scots. It is the most complete ruin in the vast edifice, and the ivy yet climbs over the portion of the mossy wall which at present remains. The wall-flower and the briar are in its innermost recesses, and the ivory turned pillars of the triumphal arch, erected in honour of her marriage by her husband Frederick V., Count Palatine, afterwards king of Bohemia. The garden attached to it was laid out for her pleasure, and is yet called Elizabethen Pforte. The council room in which her unfortunate husband consulted his nobles about accepting the crown of Bohemia is still pointed out. Elizabeth remained outside the door in an adjoining chamber. She demanded to know the decision, and when he hesitated to accept the crown, this ambitious woman exclaimed, "If you refuse to be a king, you are not worthy of having married the daughter of a king. Let me rather eat dry bread at a king's table than feast at the board of an Elector;" and it would appear as if the spirit of destiny hovered near her in the air as she uttered these words, and recorded them as to be verified in the book of human fate, for she lived not only to eat, but even to beg the bread of charity with her children, "but she would be a queen!" In the cellar of this castle is the celebrated Heidelberg Tun. Its dimensions are 38 feet by 24 feet, and it is the largest wine cask in the world. It is now long since it was used, and longer since the merry waltz went round in triumph on its broad summit. It is capable of containing 800 hogsheads, and is said never to have been filled but once. It has been out of use altogether since 1769, or very close on a century,

The tower called Der Gespenge Thurm, which served as one of the defences of the castle, though undermined and blown up by the French, did not fall to pieces, but fell or slid into the ditch, where it yet remains in a compact mass.

The Gardens and shrubberies surrounding the castle, and originally planned by the engineer, Solomon de Caus, are delightful in the extreme, whilst the terraces and elevations afford variety, of most interesting views. In the remote distance may be traced many a brilliant winding of the Rhine, sparkling like a golden stream in glorious sunshine, as it is joined by the Neckar issuing out of its vine clad valley, and winding through a plain of the greatest fertility. Towers and spires proclaim the haunts of busy men in many cities and villages lying out in repose before you, whilst the landscape itself is bound by the boggy mountains lining the distant horizon.

However it is from the extreme point of the terrace projecting over the Neckar, that we obtain the best general view of the castle. But a view from one point would ill repay the tourists visit when we consider the imposing magnificence of the old ruins, and the grand, yet soft sweet beauty of the surrounding country. The heights on the right bank of the Neckar, approached from the end of the bridge by a steep path, or from Neuenheim by a more gradual ascent, should be ascended by the tourist. The hill fronting the town reached by the path called the Philosophers' Walk will afford a good view, as will also, in a more extensive way the Heiligenberg, a hill between the valley of the Rhine and the Neckar. This was the point chosen by Tilly to open his trenches in the thirty years war, and on its top we see the ruins of a castle.

A lovely inn called Hirschgasse, standing fifty yards or so above the bridge is the spot where the students duels are fought, sometimes at the rate of four or five a day.

The Königstul is the loftiest hill in the district standing to the rise of the town and castle. A very extensive view may be had from its summit, which may be ascended in an hour or two's walk or by carriage. A high tower has been erected on the spot, and the visitor would do well to ascend it and enjoy the grand prospect it commands. Beautiful indeed is the panorama, including the Rhine and the Neckar, the Odenwald and Haardt mountains on the west, the Taunus, the ridge of the Black Forest, the Castle of Eberstein, and the spire of Strasburg Cathedral ninety miles distant. The sun rising as witnessed from this hill is decidedly magnificent, conveying to the spectator an exhibition of celestial grandeur well worth contemplation. Never can he forget the golden ocean, irradiated by thousands of spiral shades of starlike brilliancy from which the monarch of the day emerges on wings of fire illuminating up the entire extent of his eastern territories. Persons anxious to witness this glorious spectacle should pass the previous night at the Inn near the top called Kohlhof.

Above Heidelberg the banks of the Neckar afford many delightful excursions; the one to Neckar-gemünd six miles off, from whence the tourist may prolong his route to Neckar-Steinach (Inn Die Harfe.) Two miles from the castle and approached by a road overhanging the Neckar, is seen the Wolf's well, a pretty secluded spot. Here the enchantress Jetta who first foretold the greatness of the house of the Counts of the Palatinate, was torn in pieces by a wolf. Close by is a good inn, celebrated for its trout and beer. The road along the margin of the road leads hence to Heidelberg. Two miles on the road to Darmstadt we meet with the little village of Handschuhsheim on the Bergstrasse, where there is a famous collection of Mexican antiquities. Dossenheim, two miles from this last village, is famous for its cherries.

On the right bank of the Neckar we see Neuenheim, a small village. Opposite, on the railway station, is a house in which Luther lodged on his way to Heidelberg, in 1518. Droekies can be hired for excursions through the town and suburbs.

Ellwägen to Heilbronn in 7 hours; to Stuttgart in 12 hours; and to Warsburg in 15 hours Daily.

Railways to Mannheim, stopping at Friedrichsfeld, the junction of the Frankfurt and Darmstadt railway. The Baden railway, Heidelberg to Bäle, branches to Baden-Baden and Kehl (opposite Strasburg,) trains to Carlsruhe in 1½ hours; Baden 3 hours; Kehl 5 hours; to Freiburg in 7 hours; to Halbringen, 4 miles from Bäle, in 9 hours. Tourists will find the 2nd class carriages comfortable and respectable.

Steamboats on the Neckar to Heilbronn in 13 or 14 hours, descending in 7 or 8.

St. ILGEN Station—Quitting this station, the railroad is carried through a flat plain, bounded eastwards by a range of hills, and the country through which it passes south of Heidelberg has none of the beauty of the Bergstrasse.

WINDLOCK Station: here is a mineral spring and a state prison called Klesau, formerly a ducal palace.

LANDENAUER Station: (Inn: Post.) A small place with 1,300 inhabitants. The mineral springs here range in temperature between 80° and 60° Fahrenheit, and are strongly impregnated with sulphuretted hydrogen gas and sulphur. The sulphur baths are well constructed. There is a table d'hôte and music.

BRUSCHAL.—Inns:

Poste.

Bradischer Hof.

Zahringer Hof.

Has a population of 7,500, and was formerly the residence and property of the prince-bishops of Spire. Its chief curiosities are the episcopal palace near the gate leading to Frankfurt, and the church of St. Peter, with the tombs of the last bishops. Travellers for Munich and the Tyrol leave the railway here. Railway from Bruschal to Ludwigsburg in progress. The line from Bruschal to Stuttgart is joined at Ilmenau by the line from Carlsruhe to Stuttgart.

UNTERGROMBACH Station.

WEINGARTEN Station.—A beautiful village, with a population of 3,000 souls, where we yet see the ruins of the castle of the lords of Schmalenstein. Not far from this village lies the ancient Schloes-Buehl, or the place where justice was publicly administered in the middle ages.

DURLACH Station, with a population of 5,000, was once the capital of Baden-Durlach, and the residence of the Margraves of that branch of the reigning family since 1771, when the Baden-Baden line became extinct.

In the palace gardens are many Roman antiquities, such as altars, milestones, obliterated bas-reliefs. The ruins of the palace or chateau is now used as a cavalry barracks.

Ellwägen from here to Wildbad in 6 hours.

Passing GOTTESAU to the right, a castle built in the ancient style, which at present serves for an artillery and cavalry barracks, we arrive at the

Carlsruhe Station.—24,600.—Hotel :

Hotel Grosse, an excellent house, kept by Mr. Grosse, formerly proprietor of the Golden Cross Hotel, now closed.

Carlsruhe, the capital of the grand-duchy of Baden and the seat of government and chambers, lies $1\frac{1}{2}$ leagues from the Rhine in the Haardtwald, or hart forest, which bounds the town on the north and west. In 1715 a hunting-seat was built on the spot by the Margrave Charles of Baden, and to this fortuitous circumstance we may ascribe the existence of the town, now one of the finest in Germany, and containing a population of 23,000 inhabitants. The streets are regular, broad, and light; some of them afford a prospect of the neighbouring mountains, whilst others form a pleasant architectural picture. The rapidly flourishing state of the town may be dated from the time when the margravate was raised to an electorate, and afterwards to a grand-duchy. It is built in the shape of a fan or wheel, with all the streets converging at the castle, which forms a centre. The generality of the buildings that adorn the city, were founded by the late Weimbrenner and Arnold, director of buildings. An aqueduct conveys water through iron pipes from Durlach to Carlsruhe, and the streets are provided with fountains, serving as ornaments whilst of great convenience.

Leaving the railway station, the tourist enters Carlsruhe by the Ettingen gate, and sees the monuments of the grand duke Karl, who died in 1818; of Lewis, who died in 1830; and of the Margrave Charles William, founder of Carlsruhe, as he passes through the street leading to the palace, the former a bust, and the two latter a statue and a pyramid, are situated in the market place, on the east of which we see the protestant church, and the Rathaus on the west.

The Palace is a building presenting no very remarkable appearance. From its tower forming the centre of all the town buildings, you have a rich and extensive prospect: from it you can distinctly trace the roads into the Haardt forest, corresponding with the streets. The Rhine, and beyond it the Vosges mountains in France, the mountains of the Schwarzwald on the south, and those of the Bergstrasse on the north;

these, with the vast and cultivated plains within the mountain framework, form a picture well worth carrying away in the memory of those bidding adieu to Germany. Attached to the palace there is a theatre, open three times a-week. In the court-yard is a statue by Schwanthaler, of the Duke Karl Frederick, who died in 1811.

The Palace Garden is a fine plantation, which, on one side is contiguous to a pheasant preserve, and on the other to the botanical garden. The garden called Amaliensruhe, named after the deceased Margravine Amalia, contains some very agreeable walks and is open to the public.

Academie Gebäude is a very fine building, erected by Hübsch, in 1843. It is constructed of grey sandstone, striped with red lines, and ornamented with frescos by Schwind. It contains a gallery of paintings, among which is a portrait of Colbert, some Dutch paintings, and a medallion portrait of Newton, by De Witte.

The Museum, to the right of the palace, is rich in fossil remains, &c., among them is the skeleton of a mammoth, dug up at Oos. The museum is also called the club, and German, French, and English papers are taken in.

In the town is a very fine library, containing upwards of 90,000 volumes.

The Hospital is near the Muhlberg gate, and was founded and endowed with a sum of 100,000*fl.* by the celebrated tailor, Stultz, who was created a baron. In the Friedhof is pointed out the grave of Jung Stilling, who died in 1817, in Carlsruhe.

Eilwägen to Stuttgart, twice daily in $7\frac{1}{2}$ hours, to Zweibrücken in 11*¼*; to Landau in $3\frac{1}{2}$; and to Pforzheim in 3 hours.

Quitting the last station, at the distance of two miles, we see from the railroad on the right, Bulach, where there is a modern church, built in the Roman style by Hübsch, in 1838. Its interior is ornamented with frescos by Dietrich, of Stuttgart.

ERTLINGEN Station, lies at the opening of the Albdal, and contains a population of 4,000. Here there are still extant, ten Roman monuments and the remains of Roman baths. On the Alban a large number of paper mills.

Malsch Station.

MUSENSTADT Station.—Omnibuses to Gernsbach.

The duchy of Baden, into which we now enter is one of the richest districts in Germany, and the railroad in its course passes through a country producing tobacco, hemp, flax, hops, and maize. Vineyards cover the sloping hills, and large walnut trees shade the road, which in their luxuriance promise large supplies of oil, &c. And as the traveller proceeds, he cannot help being amused at the appearance of the farmers with their long dark coats, red waistcoats, and large three-cornered hats, the broad flaps of which are looped up behind, giving the wearer the appearance of a Greenwich pensioner.

RASTADT Station.—Inns:
Badischer Hof.
Goldenes Kreuz.

This regularly built town, the late residence of the Margraves of Baden-Baden, is situated on the Murg, and has a population of 5,680. Its large palace of red sandstone, built by the Margravine Sybilla Augusta, wife of Louis William, is now uninhabited, and presents a decayed and deserted appearance. In the apartments of the palace we behold several trophies, which he brought with him on his return from the war against the Turks. It is also remarkable as having been the place where several European congresses were held. The small cabinet is still pointed out in which Prince Eugene and Marshall Villars signed the treaty of peace in 1814. Another treaty was signed here in 1797-99, but it was never carried into effect in consequence of the foul assassination of the French deputies, Robejot and Bonnier. A monument is erected to their memory outside the Rhinau gate, on the spot where they were murdered. The picture gallery of the palace contains some remarkable trophies of warfare, and portraits of some Circassian slaves, taken captive by the Margrave Louis, but several valuable antiquities were stolen from it in 1849, when Rastadt was taken possession of by 6,000 revolutionary scamps, consisting of escaped convicts, disgraced soldiers, &c., who did not evacuate the town until July in that year.

The railway quitting the last station, crosses the Murg at a spot half-a-mile from which we see the ruined and deserted old château called the Favourite, 6 miles from Baden. The château is only remarkable as being a specimen of the style of former days, and of the tastes of its founder, Sybilla, who ended her days within its walls. Her youth was a scene of levity and vain self glory, and her old age a picture of superstition and bigotry, the former led her to lacerate her body, and we still see the gloomy oratory where she lingered out the last few days of her existence, and the sharp scourge of wire string with which she lacerated her miserable frame. A hair shirt her inside garment, a rush mat her bed, her kneeling stool a circular piece of pointed wire, her only companions in her prison chapel were two wooden figures of the virgin and St. John, with these she sat at table and divided her meat into three equal portions, one for herself, and two for the wooden statues, which, as of course they did not eat, she considerably gave to the poor.

Oos Station.—From here there is a branch line to Baden, 3 miles distant. Crossing the Oos after quitting the last station, the railroad proceeds on to Sinzheim station, and shortly after arrives at Steinbach station, a small place situated at the foot of the hill of Yburg, and remarkable as being the natal spot of the architect of Strasburg cathedral.

BUHL Station.—(Inn: Post.) Arriving from here at the next station of Ottersweil, on the east opening up before us, lies the valley of Hub, enclosing the ruined castle of Wendelsch and the Hubbad.

ACHERN Station.—A small village that some few years since acquired the privileges of a town. It has a population of 2,000 inhabitants. Two miles below Achern, on the left, is SASBACH, with 1,200 souls. To the right of the post-road and left of the railway, just outside the village, we see the monument, a granite stone obelisk erected to the memory of General Turenne by the French, on the spot where he was killed by a cannon ball, as he was reconnoitring the Austrian army. The present is the fourth monument erected, the others having been destroyed. Much confusion was occasioned in the French ranks by this general's death, and the troops, disgusted by want of success and inaction, exclaimed in irony—"Lâchez la pie elle nous conduira!" in allusion to the general's piebald charger, which had so frequently led them to victory. Behind Achern and Sasbach, the Hornisgrunde mountain grounds rise considerably high. On one of these there is a ~~small~~ chaos, and surrounded with awful environs lies the Memelsee, a lake unfathomable in its depth.

The ruins of the Abbey of Allerheiligen, or All Saints, burned in 1003, can be visited by Ober-Achern, Cappel, and Ottenhöfen. The convent lies in a dreadful wilderness, in a central valley, enclosed by the rocks of the Kniebis. Leaving the last station, the railroad crossing the Rench, which descends from the Kniebis, arrives at RENSCHER Station, a fine market town, with a population of 2,600 inhabitants, once of considerable importance.

APPENWEIR Station.—From this point a railway branches off on the right to Kehl, Strasburg, distant 9½ miles. Tourists for Strasburg, and who intend proceeding thence to Switzerland, through Freiburg or Schaffhausen, will do the best thing to proceed on to Offenburg, where the baggage might be left at the inn opposite the station, and return thence to Strasburg.

The road takes you from Appenweir, across the Kniebis, which is 3000 feet high, to Freudenstadt, and to Stuttgart, 39 miles by Oberkirch, a pleasant little town, with 1900 inhabitants, at the entrance of the valley; above which are seen the ruins of Alzenburg, and 2 miles from which, up in the valley, is Lauterbach, with its fine old gothic church, built in 1471, and well worth a visit; on by Oppen, where is an inn (Krone), where refreshments and wines are supplied. An Eilwagen from Appenweir to Rippoldsau, in six hours, the last frontier of Baden, on this road.

From the railroad, on our way to Offenburg from the last station, we see to the right, the spire of Strasburg Minster, and to the left the Castle of Stanfenberg, a building of the 11th century, which affords an excellent view.

OFFENBURG Station.—(Inns, Post: Fortune, Krone) lies on the Kinzig, and was founded by Offo whence it derived its name.

OFFO'S BOROUGH.—This town, by its site, commands the entrance of the valley of the Kinzig. It has a population of 8692 souls. The town has a cheerful and sociable appearance, and the post road from Frankfurt on the Maine to Baden, and into the valley of the Kinzig from Strasburg, 12 miles off, cross each other. Two miles distant is the Castle of Ortenburg, built at a cost of £34,000, by a Russian nobleman.

Leaving the Offenburg Station, the railway crosses the Kinzig, and arrives at Nieden-Schopflehm Station, where there are glass works established on the English plan. The fire is covered, and the workmen are exposed very little to the heat.

FRIEDENHEIM Station.—A small town containing a population of 2000 souls, but no ways interesting.

DINGELINGEN Station.—(Inn, Post) a small place with 1000 inhabitants. From here a road takes you to Lehr, 1½ miles eastwards, a small but industrious town, situated on the Schutter, with a population of 7000 inhabitants. In this place are a great many stuff and cloth manufactures, and some tobacco works. The Ludwigstrasse, or Leevis road, connects this town with the valley of the Kinzig.

The outline of the Voeges Mountains are discerned lying west, beyond the Rhine, and the red stone cliffs of the Black Forest on the east; whilst on a steep hill we see the ruins of Schloss Hohengeroldseck.

KIPPENHEIM Station.—A small village only remarkable for its cast iron monument to the memory of Baron Stultz, the tailor.

ONSCHEWEIR Station.—Not far from here the railroad crosses the Ettenbach. A little to the east of the line we see Ettenheim. Its custom house is the place to which the unfortunate Duke d'Enghien was dragged, and permitted to dress himself, whence he was carried to Kappel, and thence across the Rhine to France, where he was shot six days after, by orders of that inhuman butcher Napoleon, at Vincennes. The town itself has a handsome church, and its environs are very fertile.

HIERBOLZHEIM Station.

KREIZINGEN Station.—(Inn Lach). The lovers of angling will find good amusement on the river here, salmon and trout being abundant, and excellent.

RIEDEL Station.—On quitting this station, the railroad has to make a considerable bend to the east, passing between the Kaiserstuhl and Black Forest range; the former a fertile and thickly populated, volcanic range of hills, rising out of the plain of the Rhine. In the remote distance we can clearly discern the tops of the Belchen and Blauen.

ENCKENDORFEN Station.—A small town situated on the Ebn and Breuna, in a charming country;

To the left, beyond the town, you behold on a mountain the ruins of the Castle of Hockburg the most extensive in Germany, after Heidelberg. Without the suburbs we see a large paper mill, exclusively employed in making coloured paper for the tobacco and chicory manufactories at Lahr.

DENZLINGEN Station.—The largest village of the Grand Duchy, with a very pretty church, and well worth a view.

Before reaching Freiburg, and about 3 miles north from the city, we see on the left the ruined castle of the Counts of Zähringen, from whom the reigning house of Baden takes its origin. A magnificent view may be had from the ruins, over the Breisgau, formerly an Austrian possession, but since 1805 annexed to Baden.

Freiburg in Breisgau.—14,000.—Inns: Zähringer Hof; very good; nearest the cathedral and railway station; landlord, Mr. Sommer.

Hôtel d'Allemagne, an excellent house, and the landlord speaks English.

This, the old capital of the Breisgau lies at the extremity of the chain of mountains of the Black Forest; which extends behind it to the left and right. Eastwards of it is the Dreisam, which bursts out of the Höllenthal or Infernal valley is flowing by. Freiburg was founded in 1118, by Berthold III. of Zähringen, who conferred upon it very important privileges. Its population numbers about 15,200, and its chief objects of attraction are the Minster, one of the handsomest and most perfectly finished of German edifices, built of red sandstone, in a Cruciform shape, and ornamented with airy stone tracery. It was founded between the years 1122 and 1152, by Duke Conrad of Zähringen, and owes its existence not more to the munificence of the princes of his line than to the spirited liberality of the inhabitants of the city, who generously and zealously furnished supplies to carry on and complete the work. It is probable that it was completed under Conrad I., in 1152. The west front, the porch beneath it, and nave date from 1236-72. The tower rises from a square base into an octagon, which is surmounted by a pyramidal spire of the most exquisite open work of great boldness and lightness. It is 330 feet high, and many prefer it to the tower of the Strasburg cathedral. The principal entrance is through the beautifully ornamented and exquisitely sculptured portal beneath the tower. The Deity is sculptured on the portal north, leading from the choir, in the form of an old man, breathing life into the nostrils of our first parent, and creating the solar system. The principal objects worth seeing in the interior are the statue of Berthold V.; last Duke of Zähringen, (1228), and the stone statues of the other Zähringens, a painting of the Lord's Supper, made up of thirteen figures, by Mauser, (1561), the Altar Piece, by Grien, a master-piece of the German school. Some exquisitely painted windows. On the north of the choir, in the chapel of St. Martin, is a very fine wood carving of the Virgin, representing her in the act of sheltering a host of Popes, Cardinals, Bishops, Priests, and Layacs under a mantle. A silver Crucifix of Eastern workmanship is to be seen in Brocklin's Chapel, together with his ornamental effigies in armour. A magnificently carved Pulpit, (1561), and the Bishop's Throne, (1851) are worth notice. In the University Chapel are two good paintings, by Holbein, a Nativity and an Adoration of the Magi.

The University, established in 1454, is the Roman Catholic seminary of the Grand Duchy of Freiburg. Heidelberg is Protestant. It has a voluminous library, a cabinet of natural curiosities, a fine collection of physical instruments, and a botanical gardens

The Protestant Church, a modern structure of high and elegant dimensions, built in the Byzantine style, is surmounted with an octagon tower, which formerly surmounted an old convent at Thennebach, fifteen miles off, and which was removed stone by stone and made to resume its original shape on this church. It is situated close to the gate leading to Frankfurt.

The Kaufhaus rests on pointed arches, and is a specimen of the Gothic style of the sixteenth century. Gilt fresco painted portraits of the Emperor Maximilian, his son Philip I., and Charles V. ornament its interior and exterior, and the gothic portal under the arcade is remarkable for its beautiful arrangement. The tourist will be interested by the gothic fountain in the street. The environs of Freiburg abound in places for pleasant excursions. The most com-venient spots from which a good view of the town can be obtained is the Schlossberg (castle hill) where formerly stood the citadel. Beautifully grand and picturesquely delightful is the scene as the eye ranges over the sleeping vale of the Dreisam, terminated by the waving profile of the hills of the black forest as they rise one above the other, delineating at a distance the benches of a Grecian amphitheatre.

The principal walks are to Guenthersthal, situated in a pleasant valley, to the Carthusian Monastery, in a wild and romantic district to the hermitage of the St. Barbara, and to the Othlunberg, &c. Travellers declining to pass through the Müllenthal, or Valley of Hell, on their route to Switzerland, should take an excursion from Freiburg to Steig, 11 miles off, to explore its beauties. Its scenery, combining rugged and savage grandeur, with soft and picturesque brilliancy, will be found described at page 155.

Eilwägen to Schaffhausen in 11 hours, to Comstance in 18 hours, to Alt Breisach in 2½ hours, and thence to Colmar Railway Station.

ALT BREISACH is situated on the right bank of the Rhine, 16 English miles west of Freiburg. It was once one of the strongest fortresses in Germany, but was destroyed in 1744, and is now a decayed town. This place was originally situated on the left bank of the river, but by a change in the course of the latter, became transferred to the right. It was probably founded by Dineus. The mount is a composition of basalt. On its summit is the Church of St. Stephen, where the bones of the martyrs, Gervasius and Protasius, rest in silver coffins, having been brought together in the reign of Frederick with the red beard. The wooden carvings of the High Altar, or Altar Screens, are well worth inspection. The prospect from this spot where the fort formerly stood is very beautiful. You overlook the volcanic Kaiserstuhl, or imperial chair, the pine woods of the Black Forest, the blue mountains of the Alsace, which lie opposite, and the old Breisach at your feet. In a southern direction we see Mount Eggard, on which formerly stood the citadel, and which is now ornamented with a monument in honour of Charles Frederick, Archduke of Baden. An interesting excursion can be made to the Kaiserstuhl, the summit of which offers to the tourist the most variegated views of eminences, of vineyards and gardens, of forests and villages. Its highest point is elevated 1,762 feet above the level of the sea.

Baden Railway.—Freiburg to Hattingen in two hours.

SCHALLSTADT Station.

KROTINGEN Station, an important spot, that so early as the sixth century gave a name to a noble family, and is situated in a fertile country. To the right of the road, close by, are the ruins of Staufenburg Castle.

HELTERSHEIM Station. Here formerly was the residence of the grand prior of the order of Malthe.

MULHEIM Station (Inn: Krone). A small town, beautifully situated in a charming valley, sheltered on one side by the huge Blauen, and enclosed by vineyards on the other.

The village and baths of Badenweiler is situated three miles east of the railway. The village owes its name to its wells, and is remarkable on account of the Roman bath discovered there in 1784. It was 322 feet long, by 100 feet broad. It consisted of cold and hot steam, spring steam baths, waiting places, porticoes, anointing rooms, &c. The masonry is covered with polished cement, the greater part of which is painted red. An altar which remains proves, by an inscription, that these baths were devoted to Diana Abnoa. On the Rebenhag an excellent wine is grown.

Excursions can be made to the summit of the Blauen Mountains, 3,600 feet high, 6 miles distant, and to the castle of Bürglen, equally distant.

Three miles west of Mulheim is Neuenburg where, in 1639, Bernard, Duke of Saxe Weimar, was poisoned by Richelieu; and to the north-east is Sulzburg, where Schöpflin, the reformer, was born.

SCHLIENGEN Station.—A market town, remarkable as being the spot, where, in the autumn of 1796, a battle was fought between the Archduke Charles and Moreau. To the right lies Liel, a village with iron mines, and Auggen, famous for its excellent wines. Leaving the last station, the railway bends its course towards the Rhine, now encroached on by hills.

EFRINGEN Station.

HATTINGEN Station.—From here omnibuses take the passengers on to Basle. Hattingen is four miles from Basle. When finished, the railway will terminate at Leopoldshöhe, where the Baden Custom House is. Travellers from Swi-

Switzerland will find the examination of baggage a very searching and exact one.

Omnibuses from Basle one hour before the starting of the trains.

BASLE.—(See Handbook for Switzerland).

ROUTE 29.

Carlsruhe (Oos) to Baden-Baden.

Distance, 3 English miles. This is a branch line leading off from the Oos station, as remarked in preceding route, page 143. Not far from Oos the valley contracts, and begins to be enclosed by hills on either side. On the summit of a far hill we see the old castle of Baden on the left, and the hill of Yburg surmounted by another castle on the right.

Baden-Baden.—6,000—Hotels:—

D. RUSSEL, first-rate; everything good, clean, and comfortable.

DE HOLLAND, near the Kursaal, one of the best in Germany, and table d'hôte at 1 and 5 o'clock highly recommended.

HOTEL AND BATHS at the Court of Baden, an excellent house, and deservedly recommended.

VICTORIA, very good, and highly spoken of.

DU RHIN, a first class house, and reputed as being a well-conducted house.

The season here commences on the 1st May, and continues until the 31st October.

Besides the above, there are many other private lodgings, in which good rooms may be got at various prices, from 5fl. to 13 or 16fl. per week. Baths are charged for, each 8½kr., bed, 43kr. to 1fl. per night, and breakfast 3kr. At all the principal inns, tables d'hôte will be found at 10 p.m. and 5 p.m. Charges at former hour, 48 kr. to 1fl., and at latter hour 1fl. 12 or 13kr. Private dinner at any hour, in the Conversationhaus charge, 5flrs. The Affenthaln, Klingelberger, and Muckgräfer are the best wines. A private dinner in a separate apartment, 5fl. A tariff fixed by government regulates the price of every article, &c.

Baden, civitas aurelia aquensis, and the residence of the Margraves of Baden for nearly six centuries, lies in a charming valley, on the little stream Oos, which formerly formed the borders of the duchy of Alemannia and Rhenish Francia. It has 6,000 inhabitants, and is partly built on the declivity of one of the hills among which it is embosomed. The mountains surrounding it, of which Staußen or Mount Mercury is the highest, are mostly covered with needle or brushwood, whilst the forehills are partly covered with oak and beech trees, and partly with vines or corn.

The valley chiefly consists of charming meadows, the light green verdure of which contrasts deeply and beautifully with the dark fir trees that cover the surrounding hills. In the evening at sunset the view is most magnificent. This excellent site of the town is added to by the mild climate, inasmuch as the neighbouring mountains check the influx of the north-east winds whilst the hot wells concealed in the bosom of the earth warm the soil. Baden was founded in the second century after the Christian era, and was the capital of the decumane fields, and highly-favoured by Rome's Aurelian emperors. In 1689 the town was burned down by the French, like many other towns in the middle Rhine, when the residence of the Margraves was removed to Rastadt, in the flat plain of the Rhine. To-day there is a villa of the Grand Duke there, which he visits at intervals, and resides at his castle of Eberstein in the summer. Baden-Baden is one of the most frequent watering places in Europe, and is considered by far the most beautiful of the baths of Northern Germany, even superior to the Brunnen of Nassau. The celebrated wells amount to thirteen; they differ in warmth and the quantity of solids from 54° Réaumur, or 460½° Fahrenheit, down to 37½° Réaumur, or 1,161° Fahrenheit. The principal spring for quantity or warmth is the Ursprung. It rises from a split rock near the hall, and yields every twenty-four hours, 7,345,440 cubic inches of water; and that it was known to and used by the Romans, appears from the remains of Roman masonry found here. Another well of 50° Réaumur, or 141½° Fahrenheit, springs within a few yards to the left. It is used for scalding poultry, and on that account called the Bruehlrunnen, or scalding well. Within a small distance of this issues the Hoellenquell (infernal well, and most of the other springs. This part of the town is called Hölle (Hell), on account of its heat, and in cold weather snow never rests upon it, nor does any change of weather produce any alteration in the temperature of the springs. Pipes convey the water from them through the town to supply the various establishments. A kind of temple is raised over the chief spring, and in it are to be seen some Roman antiquities found in and near Baden, such as votive tablets, altars of Juno, Minerva,

Mercury, and of Neptane, who appears to have been the patron of Baden and of this spring. In 1647, beneath the new castle, the remains of vapour baths were discovered. A kind of canal conducted the water to a subterraneous chamber, 40 feet long and 27 feet broad, and from this, a large number of pipes conveyed the vapour to the bathing-room.

The Neue Trinkhalle, or pump-room, a hall of drink, is prettily situated opposite the Ursprung, on the public walks. The superstructure is a design by Hübsch, and is certainly a very pretty building. It is formed by a long colonnade, and is ornamented with four frescoes. It offers a delightful view of the southern mountains. Pipes convey the hot water from the source, and goat's whey, &c. are sold. Visitors assemble to drink the waters at between 6½ to 7½ a.m., during which a band plays for their amusement. July and August are the season when the greatest number of visitors are at the baths.

The Promenade and Conversationhaus, are situated on the left bank of the Oosbach. Shady gravel walks intersect each other in all directions, and there are many spots affording rich and charming prospects. The Conversationhaus, or house intended for visitors to sit and converse in, lies in the background of a large green, bordered on either side by handsome chestnut trees. In the centre of the building rises the hall for conversation. It is 40 feet high, 126 long, and 87 feet broad, and is richly and tastefully decorated. Adjoining it are large rooms, for the accommodation of such as wish to refresh themselves and play. The gaming rooms are open from 11 in the morning until 11 at night.

There is also an excellent gratuitous reading-room and library, in the Conversation House, and another one belonging to Mr. Marx, to which visitors can subscribe. In the left wing, opposite the theatre, is a Restaurant, where dinners, &c., can be procured. This building has also attached to it the library and reading-rooms, where English and French papers are to be found. Visitors will have to subscribe for any length of time they remain, in order to have access to the music rooms and balls. The avenue leading to the Conversationhaus, is filled with stalls of traders from Switzerland and the Tyrol, and even from Paris; and in the evening, after dinner, the entire space is filled with chairs and tables, occupied by fashionable loungers, sipping coffee, tea, &c., and smoking.

The visitor will be attracted by the crowds surrounding the rouge-et-noir and roulette tables, where the stakes played for are heavy, and increase as night advances.

As many as 50,000 persons visit Baden-Baden during the season, and the number of English visitors is so large, that the place assumes the appearance of a settlement of our countrymen. From May to October, there is a succession of visitors from all parts of the world, who revel in all the luxuries of a capital, combined with the advantages of delightful walks, among the woods and valleys, forests and hills, around Baden-Baden. Artists and actors of first-rate talent perform at the concerts, and in the representations given at the theatre, in the grand saloon of Louis XIV. The plays are written expressly for this theatre, and may be said to be performed before audiences of kings and princes. Tickets of admission to these performances are only given to persons specially invited by the director of the Maison de Conversation, Mr. Benasat; but a large theatre is now being built, which it is expected will be inaugurated during the season of 1858.

The Oak Avenue, after the Promenade, is most resorted to, and the main road is, through a summer's evening, crowded with carriages and horsemen, and the paths on either side with pedestrians.

The Parish Church is remarkable as having within it the monuments of several of the Margraves, the most notable of which is that of Leopold William, and his Lady Francesca. The monument is supported by Turks in chains, to commemorate his feats against the infidels. A monument of Louis William, by Pagnolle; one of Margrave Frederick, who, though a bishop, is represented in armour, with a helmet instead of a mitre. At the east end of the town is the Frauenkirche; attached to it is a community of Nuns of the Holy Sepulchre, who have an educational institute connected with the convent, and are habited in black, as mourning, to be worn until the sepulchre is rescued from the infidels. The church music is executed by the Nuns, and attracts, on Sundays and festivals, many strangers.

The das neue Schloss, or New Palace, is seen above the highest houses in the town. This Palace was the residence of the Margraves for more than three centuries, but was burned by the French in 1689, and was afterwards restored to its present form. As a building it is not at all remarkable, and is only interesting from its situation and the dungeons under it, which will be pointed out and shown to the tourist by the Castellan. They are horrible hopeless dungeons such as will strike the beholder with sickening horror. They are entered by a winding stairs under the tower, and through an ancient bath constructed by the Romans. These dungeons were not so entered by their luckless inhabitants; they were let down a perpendicular shaft running through the centre of the building, blindfolded and secured in an arm chair. The vaults in which the tribunal sat in judgment are excavated out of the solid rock. The dungeons were closed by massive slabs of stone turning on pivots; several of them still remain. They are nearly a foot thick, and weigh from one to two thousand pounds. In a vault loftier than the rest stood the instruments of torture, a row of iron rings formerly part of the horrid apparatus still remain in the wall and may be seen. In this chamber was the criminal sentenced to a cruel death, called la baiser de la Vierge; he was desired to kiss an image of the Virgin placed at the further end. To do this, he was obliged to step on the trap door, it gave way beneath his weight, and he was precipitated to a great depth upon wheels covered with knives, by which he was torn to pieces. This dungeon with the fatal trap door was called oubliette, those who entered it were lost, they were indeed "oubliés." In the Hall of Judgment there are yet traces of the stone seats of the judges round the wall. Behind the niche where the president (Blutrichter) sat is the outlet to a subterranean passage by which the members of the court entered. It once communicated with the old castle at the top of the hill, but is now walled up. A very trivial circumstance, it is said, led to the discovery of these terrible dungeons, which were found in a search for a little dog who fell through the plank above; this pit when searched, disclosed the fragments of wheels set round with knives, fragments of bones, rags and torn garments adhering to them. Tradition would also assign to the dungeons as being the seat of the Vehmgericht or sacred tribunal. The Vehm of Westphalia held its meetings in the open air. The meetings of this tribunal were held in the inmost recesses of the forest at midnight. Its members who were called the Nessende, or wise ones, were chosen from among those judged the wisest, most virtuous, and the bravest of the community. Nothing in history can be compared with it for the influence it exerted, and the terror it occasioned, unless the state inquisition of Venice. The greatest and most powerful princes and nobles were anxious to enter it, either for protection from their enemies, or to secure themselves against its power. It possibly for a time worked well, suppressing offences, and bringing criminals to justice, who were above the reach of the law, but it could not fail in becoming an engine of cruelty and evil, horrible in proportion to its power and mystery. A very good view may be obtained from the upper part of the castle, which alone renders it worth notice, together with the open shaft running from the top of the building to the bottom. It is divided into two by a partition, and it is supposed that the prisoner was wound up to the top by one side of the shaft and let down into the prisons of the tribunal by the other. It is also supposed that this shaft served to convey air to these subterranean dungeons.

The English Church Service is performed every sabbath at 11 a.m. in the Spital Kirche. English visitors generally subscribe for the support of the minister.

The Post Office. Letters to and from Strassburg and Carlsruhe arrive and are despatched twice daily as regards the former place, and once in reference to the latter.

Carriages, donkeys, and riding horses are to be got here plentifully at all the inns during the season. All the charges are regulated by a tariff according to distance. The postmaster is entitled to charge 15kr. extra beyond the usual sum for every horse sent from Baden.

The Excursions.—Scarcely a path presents itself that does not conduct the visitor through some pleasant and picturesque scenes. The principal of which is the das Alte Schloss, about 2½ miles off, an interesting ruin rising out of the trees, on the top of a hill, overhanging the town. It is approached by a zig-zag carriage-road, but a shorter path is open to it for the conveyance of pedestrians and riders. The path is delightfully sheltered with woodland trees, and seats placed at intervals enable the tourist to rest himself when so disposed.

The Alte Schloss was the residence of the Margraves for many centuries, and was only abandoned by them in the fifteenth, when the abolishment of the right of private warfare enabled them to live with safety in the town where they built the new Château. The ruins lie on the northern ridge of the mountain of the old castle: the north-western point is built upon a rock of porphyry, and was probably the work of the Romans. The vegetation in these ruins is astonishing, especially on the western side. The maple and fir grow here to an immense height and thickness, and seem to derive nurture only from the light and air. The most interesting parts are the cellar-vaults, the Knight Hall, the galleries running round its mouldering battlements, from which you can enjoy many delightful prospects; and the high tower on the south-east side, ascended by a stone staircase; from the top you behold part of the beautiful Rhine the fore mountains of the black forest, churches, mills, innumerable villages, clustering in delightful harmony around sylvan and winding streams. Some wind harps were formerly placed in the upper walls, whose magic tones produced a singular effect in the ruins, especially in the dusk of the evening.

On the left you see a path leading from the gateway of the castle to Ebersteinburg, two miles off, and an old castle situated at the extremity of the village of the same name, upon an insulated rock, and commanding a splendid view. Good views may also be obtained from the Jagdhau, the Yburg, 6 miles off, and the Mercuriusberg, 5 miles off, on the top of which is a tower, and to both of which places pleasant excursions may be made.

The Lichtenthal.—The valley of the convent of the Lichtenthal is approached by an avenue of shady oaks, commencing at the south end of the town. The nunnery was founded in 1245 by the Margravine Irmengard, and preserved when the other religious houses were secularised. The founder and many of the princesses of her race spent their days here in calm retirement. It is the order of the Cistercians. The older and smaller of the two churches, called the funeral chapel, has buried within it many of Margraves and their families, over whose ashes are raised curious monuments, with their sculptured and marked effigies. It has been renewed and redecorated with many paintings of the old German School; the most remarkable in the collection are those painted by Hans Balding whose daughter died a nun in the Cloister.

The large building lying at the left side of the yard, is now the Orphan House, founded by Baron Stultz, the London tailor. The cloister has every melancholy appearance, and is separated by a rushing stream from Mount Cecilia, which throws its shade over the solitary fabric; several walks lead to the top of the mount, from which a magnificent panoramic view of the hills and mountain in the direction of Baden will be enjoyed.

Near Lichtenthal are the convent and village of Oberbeuren, lying at the entrance of a beautiful and picturesque valley, which stretches with its neat cottages and rural residences along the ether bank of the rivulet. The valley abounds in scenes of quiet loveliness, and sylvan magnificence, and the lover of nature will find himself well repaid by an excursion through it. You may proceed in a carriage as far as the picturesque village of Geroldsau, from which visitors can walk to the waterfall called the Butte, generally dried up in summer, but the walk is pleasant and worth having. A pedestrian disposed to make a tour of 12 or 14 miles might walk on hence to Yburg, and thence to Geroldsau over the hills, returning to Baden by Lichtenthal; but a guide will be necessary for this. A carriage and two horses, costing about 6*fl.*, will take the traveller, not having much time to spare, to the principal objects of attraction in and about Baden in about six hours. He first visits the old Schloss on foot, occupying about three hours, and drives thence to Neu-Eberstein by Lichtenthal, descending the Murgthal to Gernsbach; by Ottenau, Rothenfels and Kuppenheim to the favourite, from whence he can return to Baden or to Rustadt Station. The drive to Gernsbach and New Eberstein from Baden and back will occupy a forenoon but the most delightful excursion that can be made from Baden is to the valley of the Murg, which abounds in charming scenery, and is ten leagues long. The scenery is now mild and picturesque, bathed in calm loveliness; again bold and grand in its rugged wildness.

The road leads past an excellently cultivated country-seat of the Margrave William of Baden, and thence through the villages of Rothenfels:

and Goggenau. The latter place has a glass house, worth seeing. Behind the little town of Gernsbach you see, pouring down on you between fir trees, the famous castle of Neu Eberstein, projecting from a rugged crag, and so situated as to have enabled its possessors in former days to command the passage of the valley and stream. It was rebuilt about thirty years since on the old foundations, and is antiquesly furnished and ornamented with Gothic furniture, armour, painted glass, &c. It is the summer residence of the Grand Duke, and strangers are freely admitted to see it. The prospect is unique, both in an eastern and western direction, and there is scarcely a spot in Germany comparable to it. A zig-zag road leads from the castle gate to the Murg, giving a shorter footpath to the Der Klingen, or white chapel.

Behind Weissenbach, whose churchyard peers down upon you from a shady hill, the road rises higher and higher, along over rocks with steep precipices, and the roaring river, soon lost amidst wild cliffs through which it has burst its way. The valley grows wilder and more picturesque the nearer we approach to Langenbrand. From here a short league takes us to Gernsbach, presenting all the appearance of a Swiss village. Here the road is enclosed by mountains on the left, touching on the right a chasm into which the Murg thunders its furious waters, maddened by the huge blocks of granite impeding its current. We soon arrive at the last village belonging to Baden.

FORBACH.—(Inn: Krone).—Where all the beauties of the Murg pass away like a shadow before us. Forbach, which is 12 miles from Baden, terminates the day's excursion for parties intending to return to Baden. But it may be well to observe, that for those whose time does not hasten them on, the valley of the Burg is the door to the other magnificent valleys of the Black Forest.

A few miles beyond Forbach the Baumenbach rushes down, over broken rocks into the Murg. Here amidst impervious mountains is the basin or species of tank Schevellung, containing 1,500,000 cubic feet of water. At its extreme end the Murg loses all interest. Arriving at the post station Schönmünznach, we reach the frontier of Württemberg.

ROUTE 30.

Baden to Strasburg.

Persons wishing to visit Strasburg will find an omnibus at the station on arrival of each train. Carriages are always ready to take them to Strasburg and back, thus avoiding the inspection of luggage, which takes place each time of crossing the Rhine.

From Appenweir station, on the Great Baden Railway a line branches off to the right to Kehl, before arriving at which, we pass Kork station.

Hotel de l'Agneau Blanc.—Post House—good accommodation, moderate charges, and obliging landlord. English spoken.

A small village, once a German fortress, situated on the bank of the Rhine, where it joins the Kinsig and Schutter. It is now dismantled, after having been burned and razed on many occasions by the French, against whom it was chiefly erected as a fortress.

The French Custom House is situated at the other side of the river, and the examination of baggage is so severe that unless the traveller wish to penetrate further into France, he had much better not remove his baggage from Kehl.

Opposite Strasburg, upon an island, which here divides the Rhine into two arms, is the Custom House, and the monument erected by the army of the Rhine to General Dessaix; on the left a bridge of boats connects the main land with the island. Kehl is 4 miles distant from Strasburg, and omnibuses are constantly at the station to convey passengers to the city until sunset, when the bridge gate is closed. We see the south side of the Citadel of Strasburg, after passing the second bridge. Passing the mile stone close to the Austerlitz gate, we enter Strasburg. Should the traveller merely intend a visit of a few hours, or the length of a day, his passport is kept at the Guard House for him until his return, but otherwise it is handed over to the police.

ROUTE 31.

Offenburg to Constance.

BY SCHAFFHAUSEN, THE KINSGTAL, AND DONAUESCHINGEN.

Distance from Offenburg to Schaffhausen, 102 English miles. and thence to Constance 80 English miles.

OFFENBURG.—(Inns: Die Fortuna and La Poste). Starting on our route, we proceed in an eastern direction to the rear of Offenburg, the charming valley of the Kinsgtal. At the opening of the vale, farther on, we pass Ortenburg, with the picturesque ruin of an old castle. Here grows the most excellent red wine, in the Grand Duchy of Baden.

GENGENBACH.—(Inn: Badische Off.) once an imperial town, with a late Abbey of Benedictines, now secularised. From Offenburg to this place, the valley offers a great many beautiful views on either bank of the river. The town has 25,000 inhabitants, and its most remarkable buildings are the Cloister, the Guild Hall, the Merchants' Hall, the New Hospital, and the Church of St. Mark. The Church of the Cloister is a beautiful one. Behind Gengenbach, the valley gradually narrows, but at the same time begins to present a more picturesque and agreeable appearance,—the mountains clothed in deep verdure, appearing closer at every step, closed the charming meadow ground washed by the Kinsig, and forming the valley.

RIBERACH.—(Inn: Fürstenberger Hof), on the left bank of the river, close to Hausach. A lateral valley from here takes the tourist to Zell, on the Hammersbach, remarkable for its porcelain manufactory. Further up in the valley we come to HASLACH, a place with 18,000 inhabitants, formerly the residence of the members of the house of Fürstenberg, to which both Haslach and the neighbouring Hausach belong. Above Hausach, the road verges to the left, taking you to the romantic valley of Schappach, at the extremity of which are the baths of Ruppoldsau, lying at the foot of the Knibis. The small town of Wolfach lies at the opening of that valley, and a considerable trade in timber is carried on by the inhabitants. The direct road which we pursue on our route leads in a south easterly direction through a country presenting a Swiss appearance to

HORNBERG.—(Inns: Post and Bear), situated under a height, with 1,100 inhabitants. The town of Hornberg formerly belonged to Württemberg, but is now under the sway of Baden. It lies in a narrow ravine under a height surmounted by an old castle. The road from here to the next town leads up the valley of the Gutach, winding in immense curves until it suddenly carries you to the entrance of the little town of TRIBERG.—(Inn: Badische Hof). A place with 800 inhabitants, romantically situated off the high road, and hemmed in by lofty precipices. Triberg is the principal market for the clocks of the black forest, and for the yellow coloured straw hats worn by the peasantry. Over 200,000 of these clocks are yearly exported, under the name of Dutch clocks to the various countries of Europe, and to America and China. The waterfall will attract attention as a very pretty cascade. It is formed by the mountain brooks which unite, and from one of the precipices hemming in the town, pour their waters into the chasm below, causing a great number of small cascades. Its singularity renders it as deserving of being seen as any of the Swiss waterfalls, and it is really one of the most notable spots of the Black Forest. The mountains are partly covered with dark fir-trees, and every object has already an Alpine appearance.

St. GEORGEN.—The only object worth notice at this place is the old Benedictine Abbey, burnt by the Duke of Württemberg, because the monks would profess the Lutheran doctrine, but another was soon erected again and the ruins of the old one preserved. From here the road inclines to a descent until our arrival at VILLINGEN.—(Inns: Post, Blume, but indifferent). A small market town with a population of 3,750 inhabitants. The town itself presents the appearance of a square, intersected at right angles by two principal streets, at each end of which there is a gate. Near Swenningen, four miles east of this place is the source of the Neckar. We are now in a country that can fairly be called cascade land, so plentifully does it abound in fountains and waterfalls, the reservours of the Black forest feed the two principal rivers in Europe. The two extremities of a Continent receive the melted snow flakes of its ridges, and in many instances the water drops of its houses find their way in one direction to the German Ocean, and in another to the Black Sea, though they originally melted and dropped within a stone's jerk of each other.

DONAUESCHINGEN.—(Inns: Schütze; Falke), the capital of the principality of Baar, once the property of the Prince of Fürstenberg, one of the mediatised princes, whose palace is the principal building of the town, which contains 3,150 inhabitants. In the garden of the palace is the source of the Danube, a circular basin of clear sparkling water, conducted through a channel under ground for about fifty yards into the Brigach, from this spot called the Danube. Though the two upper streams the Brege and the Brigach are long, yet they are not known as the Danube until they join the stream of the castle garden, but for which, despite the length of their course, they would be liable to be exhausted; hence the claim of this court-yard basin to be called the source of the Danube, whose real origin, like that of the Nile, is very obscure.

The country for miles around Donaueschingen is moist and marshy, the seat of innumerable springs all flowing to the Danube. At Hülfigen, about a mile from this place, our road crosses the Brege, which is joined by the Brigach, a mile further down, and considered the chief stream of the Danube.

Ettlingen.—Donaueschingen to Constance by Geislingen direct in nine hours. Engen, remarkable as the spot where the Austrians were defeated by Moreau in 1800, both sides losing 7,000 men. The height of Hohenhöwen, an extinct volcano, was occupied by the Austrians, but were driven from it by the French.

Our road to Scaffhausen leads through a bare and open country, in the midst of which we see to the left the ruined castle of Fürstenberg. We pass the small village of Riedbührlingen and Blumberg a miserable post house, near which is the Custom House. The ascent and descent of the Rande, a very steep hill, occupies this stage. A magnificent view can be enjoyed from the summit of the hill the spot near the wooden cross. On the left we see the mountains and extinct volcanoes known as the Hohenstoffeln, Hohenkrähe, and Hohentwiel and in the same direction the lake of Constance unfolds its charms to the eyes, whilst the towers of Constance and the snow-capped hills of Switzerland add beautifully to the background of the picture. Midway down is the Custom House of the Baden frontier. Just beyond the road enters Switzerland, and passes through a valley to

Scaffhausen.—HOTEL:

Hotel du Krone (Crown)—very clean, and moderate charges.

Hotel Weber, at the Rhine Falls.

Steamers daily to Constance.

At Scaffhausen post horses are supplied on the road to Constance. The stages are RANDEB, where we meet the Baden Custom House.

SIXEN, where we pass at the base of the Hohentwiel, formerly a famous old castle, and in latter times a mountain fortress of the late Dukes of Wurtemberg, which, however, is now dismantled and standing in ruins on a lofty rock.

RADOLFEKIL.—(Inn: Post-house).—The town itself is a miserable hole, situated at the end of the extreme branch of the Lake of Constance, and known as the "Unter See." It contains a very fine old church in the German Gothic style.

PETERSHAUSEN, situated on the right bank of the Rhine, which here from a lake becomes a river, was under the Empire a free abbey. Crossing the Rhine by a wooden bridge, we reach Constance.—INN:

Hecht (Le Brochet).

Krone (La Couronne), both well spoken of.

Hotels Delsile Post and Aisle d'Or.

Is situated at the north-west extremity of the Bodense, or lake of Constance, on the left bank of the river. Erected by the Romans in the commencement of the fourth century, it was considerably improved since the middle of the sixteenth century, and flourished as a free imperial town in its trade and manufactures throughout the middle ages. It is dull and monotonous, but the deep interest attached to its historical traditions, cannot fail to make it an agreeable sojourn of a day or two. It formerly contained 40,000 inhabitants, but has at the present time not more than a population of 8,000. It has, however—begun to improve lately, and the government have formed a port on the lake, which, whilst adorning the town, is also useful for the purposes of extending and promoting prosperity and trade in all the departments of their industrial pursuits and energies. It has been formed at an immense cost.

The Minster is the principal church in the town and is a gothic structure erected in 1802, in a cruciform shape, except the sixteen columns that support the nave of each hewn out of a single block, 18 feet high, which date from the 13th century. The platform of the steeple affords a delightful and extensive view of the distant shores of Suabia and the Vorarlberg, at whose back you see on one side the mountains and the seven hills of Graubünden, and on the other the chain of the Appenzell. Circular arches in the Romanesque style flank the nave, in the centre of which, close to the pulpit, a stone attracts your attention. That is the spot on which the martyred Huss stood when receiving sentence of death by the stake from the wretched men who constituted themselves his judges. A remarkable tomb of English brass stands in front of the grand altar. Beneath it, lie interred, the mortal remains of Robert Hallam, bishop of Salisbury, who attended the council with a deputation from the English church. He is represented as wearing the order of the garter. The stalls of the choir will deeply interest the visitor, who cannot fail to be delighted with the exquisite carvings ornamenting them. The death of the virgin, represented by lifelike figures, in the north transept, is worth inspection, as also the beautiful tracery work of the still existing sides of the ancient cloisters. A circus like building is seen in one of their angles, and in its centre a round room, in the gothic style, containing a number of curiously devised scriptural figures. It is used for the commemoration services of the passion, on Good Friday. In the sacristy are some very curious relics, Brabant lace, and a beautiful mantelpiece. The cupboards or presses in the upper vestry-room will interest.

The Dominican Convent, now a cotton factory, stands upon a little island, once a Roman fortification. In it is shown the spot where Huss' stone prison, now removed to the Kaufhaus stood. The church, chapter house, and cloisters, form very picturesque ruins.

The Hall of the Kaufhaus will be ever memorable as the place within whose portals was held the famous Council of Constance, in 1414-18, consisting of 80 princes and cardinals, 4 patriarchs, 20 archbishops, 150 bishops, 200 doctors of divinity, and a host of other secular and clerical dignitaries. The readers of history are familiar with the acts of this council, which deposed the infamous John XXIII. and Benedict XIII., electing Martin V. instead. No time can ever obliterate, nor blot out its infamy and horrible cruelty in sending to the stake Jerome of Prague and John Huss. Their unprincipled and treacherous seizure and barbarous murder, will ever remain as incentives to execrate and detest the memories and principles of the civil and ecclesiastical monsters who sent them to the faggot, and condemned them to torture. Though centuries have rolled by since the crime was perpetrated, the murder is not forgotten, nor the memory of these heroic men less enshrined in the affectionate respect of the high-minded and just, because they were murdered for the sake of a principle.

The curiosities of the hall are the chairs in which sat the emperor and pope, Huss' bible, a model of his dungeon, the car on which he was drawn to execution, the figure of Abraham, that supported the pulpit in the minster, and other relics of the council, beside a collection of Roman and German antiquities. Parties are charged 1*fr.* for admission.

The house in which Huss had apartments is seen in the Paul's Strasse, near the Schnetzthor. He was imprisoned first in the Franciscan, but was soon conveyed to the stone dungeon, in the Dominican convent. In the suburb of Brühl, outside the town, is the field in which he suffered death with heroic fortitude. The spot is shewn where the stake was placed, and earthen images of Huss and Jerome are offered for sale.

In Constance was negotiated the treaty of peace between the Swiss confederation and Sigismund, of Austria, and signed at Aarberg, in July, 1415. The house behind the hotel Hecht, in which we see the beautiful Gothic window, is the house where the emperor lodged. The treaty of Presburg in 1815 transferred Constance from Austria to Baden, and, since 1802, it is no longer an Episcopal see.

The navigation of Lake Constance is accomplished by seven or eight steamers, which keep up a communication two or three times a day with the principal places upon its banks. The traffic upon this lake has received a considerable impetus from the formation of a port at Friedrichshafen and the southern terminus of the Württemberg railway; and it is likely to be still further augmented by the completion of the Bavarian railway to Lindau, which is anticipated in the course of this year, 1853, and by which it will be brought into communication with the system of railways in that kingdom, also with those of Northern Germany.

The northern banks of the lake are flat; but the southern side presents a series of picturesque views, having the mountains of Appenzel and St. Gall, together with those of the Tyrol, in the back ground.

Excursions can be made from here to Richnan, situated in the broad part of the Rhine, and famed for its monastery, founded by Charlemagne; and to Mainau, four miles north, famous as being once the seat of the commandry of the knights of the Teutonic order. It is approached by a wooden foot-bridge, which connects it with the shore. From the terrace of the garden surrounding the house in which the commandry dwelt, some delightful views may be had.

Diligences daily to Zurich in 8½ hours; to Schaffhausen in 4½; to St. Gall in 5; Donau-schingener in 8; and to Freiburg in 17.

Steamers to all the ports of the lake, corresponding with the Diligences to Milan, at Rorschach, at the Friedrichshafen, with the Ellwägen, for Stuttgart, and at Lindau with those to Munich and Augsburg.

ROUTE 32.

Freiburg to Schaffhausen.

BY THE HÖLLENTHAL.

Distance, 57 English miles. Ellwägen daily—one direct in 11 hours; the other by Donaueschingen in 14½ hours.

The route is accomplished through the charming valley of the Höllenthal, or Infernal Valley which presents the appearance, at its opening, of a flat and fertile plain, enclosed amid sloping, and sylvan hills. Nearing the ascent, its original width becomes slowly contracted; and at about 42 miles from Schaffhausen, assumes a magnificently beautiful shade of romantic grandeur. Its woods, rich in foliage, cover the steep sides, from which project sharpened fragments of rock, rugged and naked, having running at their base the Dreisam, whose banks are verdant with turf, and studded with mills. The scenery here will impress the mind of the tourist as partaking of a majestic wildness, blended with a picturesque beauty; Steig and Hirschsprung are the spots most remarkable for the exhibition of this wild and rugged grandeur. On the journey we pass

BURG, remarkable from the fact that in 1796, Moreau accomplished a retreat with his army. Ninety-four years previous to this, Marshal Villars was deterred from attempting this pass, saying that he was not dare-devil enough. On our onward way we meet

STEIG, a post station, where the traveller may enjoy good accommodation, on reasonable terms. Here a steep slope of the road leads the tourist out of the Höllenthal, or Valley of Hell; and leaving it, he parts with the finest scenery. At this juncture an extra horse is required for the ascent of the Höllensteig, for which 1*fl.* 12*kr.* must be paid. Opening in the distance is Himmelreich, alias the Kingdom of Heaven—called so, we presume, from the very elevated position of the country constituting it. Passing Lenskirch, and Bondorf, (nineteen miles from which is the magnificent Benedictine Abbey of St. Blaise), we arrive at the top of the ascent, from whence may be had a magnificent view of the Lake of Constance. Close by is the castle of Hohenlupfen; and a little further on after passing Stühlingen, we cross a stream, and journeying on a distance of 11½ miles, we arrive at SCHAFFHAUSEN.—We now enter Switzerland, famous for her mountain strongholds.

The palace of nature, whose vast walls,
Have pinnacled in clouds their snowy scalp;
And throned Eternity in icy halls
Of cold sublimity, where fumes and falls
The avalanche—the thunderbolt of snow!
All that expands the spirit, yet appals,
Gathers round the summit, as to show
How earth may soar to heaven, yet leave vain man below.

A P P E N D I X

WIESBADEN.

WIESBADEN Station.—15,000.—Hotels:

Hotel de Nassau, well situated, and a very comfortable house.

Hotel de France, situated in Frederick's Place comfortable accommodation at moderate prices.

Hotel d'Angleterre, an excellent house, highly recommended.

Rose Hotel and Bath House, first rate and reasonable, kept by Mr. Schmidt, formerly of Maurice's Hotel, Paris.

Hotel and Baths, The Four Seasons, Vier Jahreszeiten, is a first-class hotel, equal to any on the Rhine.

The capital of the Duchy of Nassau is encircled by low cultivated fields, behind which on the north and north-east rises the range of the Taunus mountains, clothed with pine and other trees, the dark foliage of which forms a pleasant relief to the verdure of the valley, and the white buildings of the town. Wiesbaden, though the residence of the Duke and the seat of government, is still indebted to the celebrity of its waters for its prosperity, and the influx of visitors to it, which amount annually to upwards of 15,000.

The old part of the town presents nothing particularly remarkable but the appearance of the Wilhelm's Strasse, a handsome row of new houses fronting the promenades, is striking. It is called a 'city of lodging houses,' almost every house being appropriated to the accommodation of visitors.

The Kurhaus der Vier Jahreszeiten, one of the most extensive hotels on the Continent, forms a corner of the Wilhelm's Strasse, and one side of a square, on the opposite side of which stands the new Theatre, a neat building, where there is always a good company of players during the season, at which period also, concerts and exhibitions are given by artists of celebrity from other towns in Germany, or from London.

Across the road is a grass enclosure, bordered by avenues of limes, and on the other side a colonnade for shops. At the extremity stands the Kursaal, an edifice which contains a magnificent salon for balls and public assemblies, with smaller apartments for refreshment and gaming, licensed by the government for the season, though the inhabitants of the town are prevented from risking their money. Gaming is carried on in the salle all day and night, and it is calculated that there is lost at these tables annually 275,000*fl.* The ground around the Kursaal is laid out as a public garden, adorned with shrubs, flowers, &c., and sheltered by acacias and other plants. Thither all betake themselves after dinner to sip coffee, smoke, and listen to the band; music is always in attendance during the afternoons in the season. From this pleasure ground, an agreeable path is continued by the side of a streamlet up the valley of Sonnenberg as far as the ruin of the ancient castle of Min from Wiesbaden.

Nothing has been left undone to render this town the most frequented watering place in Germany; the walks and drives are pleasing and varied, and from the rising grounds, the Rhine with Mayence, and other towns on its banks is seen to advantage. From five to six and eight in the morning, and again in the evening from about six to seven visitors assemble to drink the waters. They receive their draught at the well in 'boiling hot state,' and promenade, glass in hand, a long avenue of acacias, until it is cool enough to drink, after which, those so disposed, usually bathe, when the Promenade is cleared at about eight o'clock. This boiling spring is called Kochbrunnen, and presents all the appearance of a boiling cauldron, in a state of angry ebullition. Its temperature ranges at 56° of Réaumur, equal to about 156° of Fahrenheit. Besides this there are thirteen other springs in the town, all of which are of a very high temperature. These waters are now carried off to the Rhine, and so powerful is their heat that they keep warm, and never permit to freeze that portion of the river with which they first mingle.

The heat of the weather in July and August is at times very oppressive, and thunder storms are not unfrequent, but the evenings are generally fine and pleasant, and the air on the hills light, agreeable, bracing, and well calculated to remove the oppression caused by the atmosphere of the valley, from its sheltered position. Wiesbaden possesses a good winter climate for Germany, and is drier than that of Baden.

The Schlosschen (or little palace), has an excellent public library, containing 60,000 vols., and a museum or cabinet of antiquities, among which is a curiously carved altar piece, the bronze top of the standard of a cohort of the 22nd Legion, and a bas-relief representing the young God Mythus, in a Phrygian bonnet, sacrificing a bull, surrounded by Mythological figures, and surmounted by the signs of the zodiac.

The Theatre opens at 6 p.m.

Strangers are admitted to the Casino on being introduced by a member.

English Church Service is celebrated each Sunday during summer in Kirch Gasse Lutheran Church at 11 a.m. and 6 p.m., and during winter in the Hôtel de la Rose at 11 a.m. and 3½ p.m.

Conveyances: Eilwägen daily to Ems and Coblenz, three times daily to Rudesheim, and daily to Lunburg.

A Ducal Hunting Lodge—Die Platte, stands in a conspicuous position, on an elevated ridge of the Taunus, and usually forms a pleasant excursion for strangers. The apartments are tastefully fitted up with furniture, chiefly made of stags' horns, and several fine pairs of antlers hang around the hall, as trophies of the late Duke's achievements in the chase. From the roof a splendid prospect is obtained of an extensive tract of variegated country, including the course of the river for several miles, and the chain of the Bergstrasse mountains, with the woods of the Taunus and Wiesbaden lying immediately beneath.

The Convent of Klarenthal and the Fasenerie (Pheasantry), a little to the left of the road, will repay a visit.

At Bieberich is the duke's chateau. (See page 114.) All the interesting places on the Rhinegau between Bieberich and Rudesheim will be found described in route 22.

Railway from Wiesbaden to Mayence in 16 minutes, thence in 1 hour to Frankfurt on the Main station.

EMS.

Hôtel de Russie, Four Seasons, and Hôtel d'Angleterre, all good.

the Lahn. It consists chiefly of a long range of houses built against hills, which rise steeply behind it to a considerable height. The side of the valley is so narrow that there is barely space for the road and public promenade between the houses and the river. The situation of Ems eminently beautiful, and the neighbourhood possesses several objects of interest, to which excursions are usually made on donkeys, which are here numerous and well conditioned, and without which many of the visitors would be unable to ascend the steep hills by which the valley is enclosed. From this narrowness of the valley there is a want of free ventilation, the air is exceedingly oppressive and relaxing in July and August. So that it would not be an eligible residence at this time of the year for those who do not require its waters. The donkeys are posted close by the bridge of boats, and are hired for 40kr. an hour. Ems, though not able at all to compete with Wiesbaden, yet boasts a magnificent Kurwaal, situated on the verge of the Lahn, and erected by the Grand Duke. It contains a café and gaming halls, and a ball room wherein a ball takes place once a week. It is estimated that 270,000 is annually lost here in gambling.

The Kurhaus stands in the centre of the town; on the ground floor, which is a large vaulted and gloomy hall, the water of the two principal springs is drunk. Between the two springs there is a long passage, on either side of which are arranged stalls for the sale of fancy articles. Underneath the Kurhaus the Baths are situated, which are charged for at the following rates: 18kr. for the common, 36kr., 1fl. to 1fl. 30kr. for the superior class, and 48kr. for the douche baths. Tickets are usually purchased beforehand from the Badmeister, who arranges the time for taking them, to which time the bather should be punctual to a minute, as if he do not, he will lose his turn.

The waters are taken in the morning and after dinner, from 3 to 6 goblets before breakfast, and 1 or 2 in the afternoon. The dinner hour is 1 o'clock, and mostly all dine at the table d'hôte. After dinner the visitors repair to the walks, where music and sipping coffee amuses those who do not walk or ride.

The English Church Service is celebrated on Sundays in the Lutheran Church. Some beautiful walks can be taken near Ems; particularly sweet are those up and down the Lahn, which afford some magnificent prospects.

The Marion Weg, on the far side of the Lahn, the Henrietten Weg, and Maasbut, afford many agreeable walks.

Kemmenen, situated at the top of a mountain to the rear of Ems, is a splendid point of view; and from Ems also can be visited Braunbach and the Castle of Marksburg, described at route 23.

HOMBURG.

Hotels:—

HOMBURG Station.—4,000.—Hotels:

Hotel de Hesse, a first-rate hotel for families and gentlemen, highly recommended.

Homburg is a small town, beautifully situated on an eminence in the midst of agreeable scenery. Though a small place of 3,600 inhabitants, yet since 1844 it has become a very distinguished watering place, and a spot famous for its excellent mineral springs, the waters of which are decidedly valuable, and consist of five springs, one of which, that of Elizabeth, has more carbonic acid than any other saline spot at present discovered. The Stahlbrunnen is ferruginous, like that of Spa; the Badelle, a salt spring; the Kaiserbrunnen, compared to the Carlsbad waters; and the Ludwigsbrunnen.

We refer, with confidence, those who really desire to become acquainted with the resources and virtues of these justly celebrated waters, to the 'Observations on the Mineral Waters of Homburg, by F. H. Prytherch, M.D., &c. &c., who is authorised English resident physician. This publication may be had of John Churchill, Prince's-street, Soho, London; Louis Schick, Homburg; or through them, of the principal continental booksellers.

At Homburg we find one of the most magnificent Kurhaus in Germany. It is stated that over 50,000fl. are lost annually at this gaming table; and it is also said that from this establishment the state of Hesse Homburg derives its chief revenue. It has dining hall, coffee rooms, reading and smoking rooms, and is provided with a very fine band, which plays daily on the walk.

Its only object of attraction is the Palace of the Prince of Hesse Homburg. In it is a large collection of Roman antiquities, and over the inner gateway is an equestrian statue of Prince Frederick of Hesse. The daughter of George III, the late landgravine Elizabeth, had the gardens attached to the Palace nicely laid out in the English style, but they now present a deserted and neglected appearance. A succession of flower gardens and shrubberies stretch along between these gardens and the base of the Taunus, affording to the promenade a magnificent walk, and leading him to an eminence commanding a rich view of the surrounding country.

A visit can be paid from here to the Nauheim Salt Works, distant about 8 or 9 miles north east of Homburg.

English Church Service every Sunday.

CONVEYANCES.—Omnibuses correspond with the trains to and from Frankfort almost every hour. It is quite as well to go the whole distance by the four-horse coaches which run regularly from the Post Office every hour, from 8 a.m. to 10

SCHWALBACH

SCHWALBACH.—Hotel:

Hotel the Duke of Nassau, Nassau Hof, an excellent hotel most highly recommended. Landlord, Mr. Wilhelm.

Schwalbach lies considerably higher than Wiesbaden, and though the town itself is hot in the middle of the day when the sun's rays are reflected from the hills, yet the air out of the valley is extremely bracing; the ground soon dries after rain, and the walks and rides in the environs are varied, and extremely beautiful. Within the last few years the place has been considerably enlarged and improved in its appearance and accommodation. This place is far more pleasant than Wiesbaden or Ems, in being more silent and less exposed to bustle or annoyance. The season lasts little more than two months, beginning in June, and ending in August. Here also are gaming tables in the public rooms of the Allé Saal, which opens out upon the Allé on a fine avenue of trees continuous with the public promenade, where two of the springs, the Wembrunnen and the Pauline arise; the third spring, Stalkbrunnen, is separated by a low hill from the others. Near Wembrunnen is the new Bath House, a handsome building, resting on an open colonnade, which contains commodious bathing cabinets, and a promenade room. The colonnade extends the entire length of the building, beneath which booths are opened in the season for the sale of books, toys,

&c., by itinerant travellers. The Pauline spring gives water to the baths in the upper storey, and the Stahl and Wembrunnen to those on the lower. Each bath is charged for at the rate of 48kr., with 4kr. additional to the servant. Persons should be punctual in attending at the hour for which they bespeak the bath, as if they do not they will lose their turn.

The table d'hôte is at 11 o'clock.

English Church Service is celebrated on Sundays at 11 a.m. in the Upper Protestant Church, in the Lange Gasse.

The hills about are all intersected with paths, and very beautiful views can be had from the surrounding eminences, particularly from the Rustic Pavilion, standing on the summit of a hill on the road from here to Wiesbaden, and which is not more than a quarter of an hour's walk from the Pauline.

Adolphseck, a ruined castle, is another pretty excursion of a half-hour's walk. The principal excursion, and the one most surrounded with agreeable associations, is that to the Castle of Hohenstein approached by a carriage road, or by the windings of the small stream Aar, under the Castle of Adolphseck, and up the valley for six miles. Its scenery is charming and varied after a most beautiful fashion up to the moment the magnificent old castle shadows itself forth from its romantic height of black precipice.

From Schwalbach we proceed by an excellent road to SCHLANGENBAD.

Hotels:—

Heusscher Hof.

Nassau Hof, called Schlangenbad, or Serpent's

Bath, from the large number of snakes and vipers abounding in the neighbourhood.

Those who require quiet and retirement can pass a few weeks very agreeably at Schlangenbad, which being higher and more shaded is a much cooler residence than Wiesbaden. The baths, also, from being but slightly mineralised, may be used by persons in health without risk, and not only impart a pleasurable sensation at the time but likewise a feeling of bien être for the remainder of the day.

The Baths are placed in the lower storey of the old and New Barkhaus, and must be heated for bathing as the water is only 80° Fahrenheit in temperature.

A band of music plays daily on the promenade, and there are no gaming tables.

English Church Service at 5 p.m., in the Duke of Nassau's chapel, during the season.

THE MOSELLE FROM COBLENTZ TO TREVES.

Travellers who can spare the time to make an excursion up the Moselle may spend three or four days most pleasantly as the scenery all through this picturesque valley is generally very fine and in several places most exquisite. The banks of the Moselle are bordered with undulating hills covered with vines or thick woods, picturesque little villages or small towns, ruins of old castles, watch towers, and Gothic steeples, most of which are seen in the most romantic forms imaginable owing to the extraordinary windings of the river.

Steamers leave Coblenz every morning for Treves performing the journey in a day and a half, and come down from Treves to Coblenz, in 10 hours.

An agreeable way of visiting the most picturesque spots is to take a steamer up the river to any chosen spot favorably situated for making excursions inland, and then return to the same or some other village to take the up or down steamer. Or the traveller may make agreeable excursions by leaving the steamer occasionally at intervals, as it approaches the bends of the river, and then by taking the road across the points he will frequently obtain beautiful views from the summits of the hills, and then come to the point where the steamer will arrive and take him up.

The traveller, however, should previously ascertain that by so doing he will lose no finer scenery on the river.

After leaving Coblenz the first place worthy of notice is Moselweis on the right bank, where there are large public gardens. Above this village rise the fortifications of Fort Alexander, one of the advanced forts of Coblenz; situated between the Moselle and the Rhine.

Further on we pass on the left the church of Metternich, the village of Güll, with its twin spires; then village of Ley on the right, and that of Winningen on the left; after which we come to Diebelsch on the right—a place said to have been haunted by witches in former times. It is a pretty spot and is pleasantly situated in a charming part of the river.

Coburn on the left bank, is situated at the point where the Nodbach falls into the Moselle. The hills behind the town are crowned with two castles, within one of which, the Odenberg, is a beautiful little chapel—which deserves a visit from all admirers of graceful architecture.

Gondorf on the left is another pretty village, formerly the residence of the Counts von Lâyen.

Cölnet.—A village on the same side just beyond derives its name from a chain formerly placed across to exact toll from the boats going up or down the river.

Alten, on the right.—An old town connected by several towers with Schloss Turon—a picturesque old castle situated on the heights above.

Bordenbach.—Further upon the same side is situated at the entrance of Ehrenbach, a stream which is from a singular ravine, no one should omit visiting. At the commencement this gorge is narrow, dark, and gloomy, but shortly expands into a charming valley, with verdant meadows and vineyards, streams, and water-mills; &c., the perspective in front being closed by a rocky barrier on the heights of which stands the castle of Ehrenberg, said to excel in beauty any other castle on the Rhine or Moselle.

We next pass Wörzweier on the left and further on the same side the castle of Bleichstein, belonging to the Archbishop of Treves. Then Moselern a village at the entrance of the beautiful vale of Eln.

If the traveller lands at Moselern, crosses the hill or strikes across the heights along the side of the glen, he will obtain several fine views, and then passing through the romantic valley of the Eln, visit the picturesque and interesting old castle of Eln, reputed to be the beaux idéal of a feudal fortress of the middle ages.

The traveller can then return by the road direct to join the steamer at Cordes; a village charmingly situated in one of the sweetest spots of the Moselle.

Proceeding on we next pass Tröls on the right side, situated within an amphitheatre of hills, on which there are two castles. Clotten on the left, a small village with its church on the hill and the ruins of an old castle. The next place we come to is Cöchem.—Hotels, De l'Union; Ockenreith's; Römischer König. This is an ancient town of 2,500 inhabitants, and the distant view of it, defended by two castles on the hills behind is exceedingly prepossessing and attractive, but the traveller will be disappointed in visiting it, as the streets are narrow and dirty, even more so than the other towns on the Moselle.

A number of villages and small towns of no particular note are passed until the steamer reaches Pumderich, a village on the right bank. Travellers intending to visit the interesting ruins of Marionburg should land on the opposite side of the river. The view from a hill near the ruins affords one of the finest prospects on the Moselle, embracing four different bends of the river, and forming a splendid panorama. Refreshments can be had at a small inn within the ruins.

Returning to Pumderich the steamer proceeds past the villages of Enrich and Starkenbury on the right bank, and then arrives at Traben on the left. Sun Hotel classes the best. A short distance higher up on the right bank is Trabach, a town of 1,300 inhabitants, where the steamer remains during the night. This town resembles Cochem in the beauty of its position, which is extremely picturesque, and in the dirty unwholesome appearance of the streets. It is situated at the mouth of a valley, and is encircled by a range of hills or mountains. The castle on one of these commands the river entirely.

Between Trabach and Treves the scenery becomes less beautiful, and the villages and towns, with the exception of Berncastel, devoid of interest.

Berncastel.—Hotel Drei König. A town of 2,000 inhabitants. The situation of this town is so fine that most travellers would be tempted to stop and visit it, which we advise them not to do as it is both dirty and badly drained.

The steamer soon after reaches the fine old city of Treves, described at page 121.

INDEX.

PAGE.	PAGE.	PAGE.
Aart.....90	Badenweiler.....146	Brohl.....99
Achern.....143	Bailleul.....8	Bruchsal.....141
Aeltre.....22	Barse.....52	Brühl.....32
Aersböt.....57	Bary Leuze.....18	Bruges.....19, 30, 31
Aigremont.....54	Bascoup.....82	Cathedral, 20; Churches, 20,
Aix-la-Chapelle.....71	Basle.....147	21; Hospital, 21; Hotel-de-
Town Hall, 72; Environs, 73,	Bastogne.....57	Ville, 21; Palais-de-Justice,
Libraries, 73; Musical En-	Beaume.....59	21; Tour-des-Halles, 21;
tertainments, 73; Public	Beex.....50	Academy of Paintings, 22;
Institutions, 74; Promenade	Bellem.....22	Museum, 22.
and Excursions, 74.	Bendorf.....101	Brugelotte.....16
Alken.....61, 160	Benrath.....92	Brühl.....35
Alort.....13	Bensheim.....137	Brussels.....51, 61
Alt Breisach.....146	Beratersem.....64	English Directory of, 39, Royal
Alzei.....124	Berchem.....56	Square, 32, 38; Park, 32;
Amay.....53	Berlin.....92	King's Palace, 33, 38; Gallery
Ampain.....53	Berncastle.....161	of Paintings, 33; Palace of
Andennes.....51	Bertrich.....103	the Prince of Orange, 33;
Andernach.....99	Berzee.....59	Chamber of Representatives
Andulcq.....8	Beveren.....56	33; Museum, 33; Venice
Ans.....64	Bexbach.....124	Collection, 33; French
Anseremme.....60	Biebach.....152	School, 33; Burgundian
Antwerp.....25, 56	Bieberich.....114	Library, 33; Hotel-de-Ville
Appenweir.....144, 151	Biervilet.....24	34, 38; the Place, 34; Col-
Appollinarisberg.....98	Büderich.....91	legiate Church, 34; Chapel
Ardres.....8	Bingen.....110, 120	of the Holy Sacrament of Arheugen.....133	Bisseghem.....31	Miracles, 35; Chapel of
Arion.....57	Blackwall.....23	the Virgin, 35; Square of
Armentieres.....3	Blanc Misonon.....47	the Mint, 36; Sablon, 36;
Arnane.....112	Blankenstein.....91	Church of St. Nicolas, 36;
Arnheim.....90	Blomendaal.....2	Palais d'Artemberg, 37,
Assmanhausen.....109	Blumberg.....153	38; Alice-Verte, 37; Botani-
Ath.....16	Bois-du-Luc.....49	cal Gardens, 37, 38; Prison
Attenhoven.....61	Bommel.....89	des Petit Carmes, 37;
Attre.....165	Bondorf.....35	Theatre Royal, 37; Place-
Auerbach.....137	Bonn.....95	des-Martyrs, 38; Porte-de-
Audighem.....13	University, 95; Minister, 96,	Hal, 38; Post Office, 38;
Augen.....146	Museum, 96; Botanic Gar-	King's Palaces, 38; Excur-
Auvelsa.....43	dens, 96; Excursion to	sions, 40.
Bacharach.....108	Kreuzberg, 96.	Buhl.....143
Baden-Baden.....147	Boppart.....105	Buir.....75
Hot Springs, 147; Neue	Bordenbach.....160	Bukenfeld.....112
Trinkhalle, 148; Prome-	Roug.....45	Bulach.....142
nade and Conversation-	Bouges.....50	Bümelde.....55
haus, 148; Restaurant, 148;	Bousou.....47	Burg.....155
Parish Church, 148, New	Bracquevies.....59	Cadand.....34
Palace, 148; Post Office,	Braine-le-Comte.....17, 47	Calais.....1, 8
149; Excursions, 149; Alte	Braubach.....105	Carlsruhe.....141
Schloss, 150; Lichthenthal	Breille.....87	Bathans, 142; Palace, 142;
151.	Braysich.....59	Palace Garden, 142; Aca-
	Brenzheim.....111

INDEX.

PAGE.		PAGE.		PAGE.
.....90	Badenweiler.....146	Brohl	99	Brühl	85
.....143.	Bailleul	8	Bruchsal	141
.....22	Barse	52	Brühl	82
.....57	Bary Leuze.....16	Bruges.....18, 80, 81
t	Basoup	82	Cathedral, 20; Churches, 20, apelle.....71	Basle	147	21; Hospital, 21; Hotel-de-
all, 72; Environs, 73,	Bastogne.....57		Ville, 21; Palais-de-Justice, ries, 73; Musical En-	Beaume	59	21; Tour-des-Halles, 21;
nements, 73; Public	Bees	59	Academy of Painting, 22;
stations, 74; Promenade	Bellem	22	Museum, 22.
Excursions, 74.	Sendorf	101	Brugelotte	16
.....61, 160	Benrath	92	Brühl	96
.....13	Bensheim	137	Brussels.....51, 61
.....146	Beratersem.....64		English Directory of 39, Royal
.....124	Berchem	56	Square, 32, 36; Park, 32;
.....53	Berlin	92	King's Palace, 33, 38; Gallery
.....53	Berncastle.....161		of Paintings, 33; Palace of
.....51	Bertrich	103	the Prince of Orange, 33;
.....99	Bersee	59	Chamber of Representatives
.....3	Beveren	56	33; Museum, 33; Venice
.....64	Bexbach	124	Collection, 33; French
ne	Bieberach	152	School, 33; Burgundian
.....25, 56	Bieberich	114	Library, 33; Hotel-de-Ville
r	Biervliet	24	34, 38; the Place, 34; Col-
isberg	Büderich	91	legiate Church, 34; Chapel
.....3	Bingen	110, 120	of the Holy Sacrament of
.....133	Bisseghem	31	Miracles, 35; Chapel of
.....57	Blackwall	23	the Virgin, 36; Square of
res.....3	Blanc Misseron	47	the Mint, 36; Sablon, 36;
.....112	Blankenstein	91	Church of St Nicolas, 36;
.....90	Bloemendaal	2	Palais d' Aremberg, 37,
usen.....109	Blumberg	153	38; Allée Verte, 37; Botani-
.....16	Bois-du-Luc	4	cal Gardens, 37, 38; Prison
sn	Bommel	89	des Petit Carmes, 37;
.....16	Bondorf	155	Theatre Royal, 37; Place-
.....137	Bonn	35	des-Martyrs, 38; Porte-den	University, 95; Minster, 96,		Hal, 38; Post Office 39;
.....148	Museum, 96; Botanic Gar-		King's Palace, 38; Excur-
.....48	dens, 96; Excursion to		sions, 40.
.....108	Kreuzberg, 96.		Bühl	143
den	Boppard	105	Buir	75
prings, 147; Neue	Bordenbach	160	Bulkenfeld	112
thalie, 148; Promen-	Bouge	45	Bulach	142
and Conversation.	Bouges	50	Bümelde	55
148; Restaurant, 148;	Bousen	47	Burg	155
Church, 148; New	Bracquegnies.....59		Cadsand	94
e, 148; Post Office,	Braine-la-Comte.....17, 47		Calais	1, 3
Excursions, 149; Alte	Braunbach	105	Carlsruhe	141
m, 150; Lichtenenthal	Breille	87	Bathans, 142; Palace, 142;
	Braysich	59	Palace Garden, 142; Aca-
	Bresenheim	111

INDEX.

PAGE.		PAGE.		PAGE.
demie Gebäude, 142; Mu-	Diebelich	160	Fort Alexander	160
seum 142; Hospital, 142.	Dinant	59	Fourmette	160
Caloun	Dinglingen	144	Freire	59
4	Dolhain	71	Franchères	129
Catanes	Doulandorf	97	Frankenthal	127
160	Donauschingen	163	Frankfort-on-the-Maine 24, 117
Casb	Dort	89	Old and New Town, 118;
107	Dossenheim	141	Cathedral, 118; Bömer, 118
Chaffour	Douai	4	Saathor, 118; St. Leonard's
64	Duffel	56	Church, 118; Stædal Mu-
Champion	Dulaburg	91	seum of Pictures, 118;
57	Duren	75	Pensenberg Museum, 118;
Charlemont	Durlach	141	Public Library, 119; Bourne
60	Dusseldorf	91	119; Fairs, 119; Statue of
Charierol	Schools of Painting, 91; Hoff-		the Ariadne, 119; Moun-
45, 48, 69	kirche, 92; Hofgarten, 92;		ment, 119; Theatre, 119;
Chatelineau	Excursions, 92.		Post Office, 119; Casino,
48	Dusselthal	92	119; Public Gardens, 120;
Chaudfontaine	Dutweiler	112	Cemeteries, 123.
67	Eberstadt	135	Frankenstein	114
Chêlée	Ebersteinburg	130	Freiburg-in-Breisgau	145
Cherpamp	Eblinghem	3	Minster, 145; University, 145;
13	Ecaushe	47	Protestant Church, 145;
Chokier	Edeghem	56	Kaufhaus, 145; Excursions
54	Efingen	146	145.
Clermont	Elcheiskamp	91	Freudenstadt	144
53	Eifel	99	Friedrichsfeld	17
Cleves	Elbertfeld	92	Friedrichthal	112
91	Elfeld	114	Friesenheim	144
Coborn	Elk	104	Frildef	96
Coblens	Emmendingen	144	Froyennes	16
90, 102	Emmerich	91
Clotten	Empinnes	57	Gaggenau	151
160	Engen	153	Geisenheim	113
Church of St. Castor, 102;	Engers	101	Genappe	45
Palace, 102; Palace of Jus-	Engheim	16	Genenbach	152
tice, 102; Casino, 102;	Engis	53	Gernsheim	151
Fortifications, 102; Envi-	Enrech	160	Gernsbach	125
rons, 103; Excursions, 101.	Enval	71	Geroldsee	159
Cochem	Erbach	114	Gheel	57
160	Erenthal	106	Ghent	7, 78
Cologne	Erden	125	Belfry, 8; Cathedral, 8;
75, 94	Erith	23	Churches, 9, 10; Béguinage,
Eau de Cologne, 75; Droakies,	Eschewaller	75	10; Hôtel-de-Ville, 10;
76; Cathedral 77; Presby-	Esstaimbourg	16	Palace of Justice, 10;
tery, 78; Shrine of the	Etilingen	142	Palais de l'Université, 10;
Three Kings, 78; Churches,	Ever	61	Museum, 11; Maison des
79, 80; Town Hall, 81;	Eysingham	17	Batailliers, 11; La Halle aux
Theatre, 81; Palace of Jus-	Fardennes	48	Drape, 11; Maison de
tice, 81; Hospitals, &c. 81;	Fexhe	64	Detention, 11; Place
Museum, 82; House of the	Feyenove	89	d'Armes, 11; Marché au
Temple, 82; Environs 82.	Firbach	124	Vendredi, 11; City Gasm,
Constance	Flamignoul	60	12; Casino, 12; Chapel, 12;
153	Flémalle	51	Hospitals, 12; Theatre, 12;
Minster, 154; Dominican	Fleurus	45	Environs, 12.
Convent, 154; Hall of the	Flône	53
Kaufhaus, 154; Excursions,	Floréffe	49	Givet	39
155.	Flushing	24	Godesberg	29
Contich	Forbach	151	Gondorf	104, 105
56	Forchheim	117	Gondorf-Coborn	19
Cenz	Forest	17	Gorcum	3
58			Gosselens	45, 46
Corneck			Gottessu	45
64			Gony-les-Piscon	45
Cortenbosch
61
Couillet
46 Courtray
5, 30, 31
Cumplech
64 Darmstadt
133
Palace, 134; Museum, 134;
Cabinet of Natural History
134; Public Library, 134;
Theatre, 134; Roman Catholic Church, 134; Exercise Haus, 134; Casino,
134; Palace Gardens, 134;
Environs, 134.
Denslingen
145
Deptford
23
Dents
82
Deynse
7
Dhaun
111
Dhorn
75

INDEX.

	PAGE
Lichtervelde.....	80
Liège.....	54, 64
Palace, 64; Hôtel de Ville, 64
Cathedral 68; Churches of St. Jacques and St. Martin
66; University, 66; Citadel, 66
Liel.....	146
Lierre.....	56
Liendesdorf.....	95
Ligne.....	16
Ligny.....	47
Lil.....	3
Lins.....	58
Lobith.....	98
Lokeren.....	58
Lonning.....	104
L'Olive.....	82
Loe.....	64
Lorch.....	108
Lorchausen.....	108
Loth.....	17
Louvain.....	62
University, 62; Hôtel de Ville, 62 Cathedral, 62; Tower of Jansemin, 62
Lovenjoul.....	64
Luwy-shaf-n.....	127
Luxembourg.....	57
Maaburg.....	92
Maffes.....	16
Mainster.....	111
Malderen.....	18
Malines.....	61
Malsh.....	142
Manage.....	47, 59
Mannheim.....	127
Palace, 123; Jesuits' Church,
128; Theatre, 128; Harmony, 128; Château, 128;
Excursion to Schwetzingen
128.
Marche-les-Dames.....	56
Marchiennes-au-Pont.....	45, 53
Maria Leirne.....	57
Marabout.....	59
Markab.....	44
Marie Thraime.....	44
Marlange.....	67
Mavence.....	86, 114, 124
Kärntnerische Schlösser, 116; Cathedral, 116; Churches of St. Stephen and St. Ignatius,
116; Museum, 116;
Town Library, 117; Public Gardens, 117; Tower of Brusus, 117.
Mechlth.....	14, 56
Mechtem.....	97
Mel.e.....	13
Mellicocus.....	135
Menlin.....	31
Merode.....	75
Merz g.....	76

INDEX.

PAGE.		PAGE.		PAGE.
Morziplas	80	Oberbeuren	150	Riedböhningen.....	133
Moslin l'Évêque	16	Oberkassel	97	Riegel	144
Mottlach	120	Oberlahnstein	104	Rippoldau	144
Mets	124	Obernitz	112	Rochfort	97
Middleburg	24	Oberwerth	104	Rolsdorf	96
Minden	24	Oberwesel	107	Ronaldseck	97
Mittelheim	113	Oberwinter	98	Rosbecks	6
Modave	52	Obourg	82	Rousoux	64
Monrepos	101	Ockenfels	98	Rosel, the	109
Mons	46, 82	Offenbach	133	Rothenfels	150
Montigny	4	Offenburg	144, 152	Rotterdam	87
Montigny-sar-Sambre	48	Offo's Borough	144	Roubaix	6, 15
Montulstein	111	Oggersheim	127	Roulers	90
Mortalme	59	Olbreuck	99	Roux	48
Mornamerit	49	Ombret	53	Rudeheim	112
Morschheim	124	Oos	143	Ruppoldsau	152
Moselkern	104, 160	Oostcamp	22	Ruybroeck	17
Moselweis	160	Oppen	144	Ryneman	61
Mount St. Jean	43	Oppenheim	125
Mouscron	5, 15, 16	Orlinville	80	Saarbrücken.....	112, 120
Moustier	49	Orschwoier	144	Saargburg	120
Muggensturm	142	Orsay	91	Saarlouis	120
Mulheim	92, 148	Ortenburg	152	Sachsenhausen.....	133
Mulhofen	101	Ostend	18	St. A'olphe	69
Mungersdorf	75	Osterepay	106	St. Dennis	7
Münster-Matfeld	108	Ottweiler	112	St. Ghislain	47
Mutterstadt	129	Oudenarde	7	St. Georges	153
Muyser	61	Ougrés	55	St. Gear	106
				St. Gorhausen	106
Namêche	51	Pallien	128	St. Hubert
Namedy	99	Pampelfor	92	St. Ilgen	141
Namur	44, 49, 56	Pepinster	63	St. Nicholas	56
Cathedral, 49; Church of		Perenchies	3	St. Omer	5
St. Loup, 42; Châtean, 49;		Petershausen	153	St. Trond	61
Citadel, 49; Fairs, 50.		Pfaffendorf	96	Salsig	106
Nassauhof	98	Philipsburg	131	Sassbach	143
Nazareth	7	Plittersdorf	96	Saventhem	44
Neckar-Steinach	141	Pont-a-Celles	47	Schaffhausen	153, 155
Neider-Anweiler	58	Poppelsdorf	95	Schallsta't	126
Neider-Walluf	114	Pump	75	Schelle-Belle	12
Neiderfell	104	Funderich	161	Schiedam	87
Neiderolm	124			Schievstein	114
Neiderpay	105	Quaregnon	47	Schifferstadt	1, 9
Neiderwerth	101	Quatre-Bras	45	Schlangenbad	114, 150
Nessonvaux	68	Quivrain	47	Schlengen	146
Neu Eberstein	151			Schönmünzach	151
Neuenburg	146	Radolfzell	153	Schwalbach	159
Neuenheim	141	Ralsmes	4	Schwarz-Rheindorf	95
Neundorf	101	Ramersdorf	96	Solaigneaux	61
Neunkirchen	124	Ramilles	45	Solestin	54
Neurs	92	Randegg	95	Sechem	95
Neuwied	100	Rasselstein	101	Secin	4
Nelden-Schopfheim	144	Rastadt	143	Sempet	61
Niederbreisig	99	Raucuthal	114	Seneffe	47
Niedhegan	75	Rees	91	Seraing	54
Nierstein	125	Remagen	98	Shaerbeck	61
Nieukerke	56	Remcourt	64	Shildouk	61
Nimy	82	Renchen	144	Singen	168
Nirem	75	Renneberg	101	Sinzheim	143
Nivelles	45	Rheinbreitbach	98	Sinzig	99
Nothhausen	101	Rheinscherhof	98	Sobernheim	111
Nymegen	59	Rhense	105	Sodon	117
		Rhinefels	106	Solgnies	17
Oberbreisig	99	Rhurort	91	Somain	4

INDEX.

	PAGE.		PAGE.		PAGE.
Sombach	124	Thulin	47	Watten	3
Sombachs	45	Thilour	54	Wavre Mauris	45
Spa	68	Tilly	45	Weiberg	104
Mineral Springs, 68, 69; Promenades, 71		Tirlemont	64	Weinheim	127
Stammheim	92	Tourcoing	5, 15	Weingarten	141
Spies	129	Tournay	16	Weissenbach	161
Cathedral, 130; Hall of Antiquities, 130; Ritscher, 131; Harmony, 131.		Trabach	161	Weissenhurn	101
Starkenburg	161	Traben	161	Wellich	106
Steenkerke	17	Treis	160	Werden	91
Steenwerck	3	Treves	58, 121	Wesel	91
Steig	146, 155	Triberg	152	Westmael	57
Stemfurth	57	Tubise	17	Westpelaer	67
Stolberg	75	Turnhout	57	Wettern	13
Stolzenfels	105	Untergrombach	141	Wichelen	13
Strasbourg	131, 151	Valenciennes	4, 47	Wiesbaden	156
Cathedral, 131; Church of St. Thomas, 132; Academie Royale, 132; Public Library, 132; Theatre, 133; Promenade, 133; Arsenal, 133; Synagogue, 133.		Vedrin	50	Wiesloch	141
Strassels	6	Vehn	61	Winkel	113
Stuttgart	144	Vertryck	64	Winnengen	100
Sulzburg	146	Verviers	71	Wolfach	152
Sumets	48	Vesterloo	57	Woolwich	23
Sweningen	152	Vieux Dieu	56	Worms	125
		Villengen	152	Cathedral, 126; Synagogue, 126; Country round—Excursions to, 126, 127.
Tamies	48	Vilvorde	15, 61	Wörstadt	124
Templeuve	16	Vivier L'Agnean	57	Wortzenfort	160
Termonde	13	Vlaardingen	87
Terneuzen	24	Wareghem	6	Xanthen	91
Tête de Flandre	79	Walcheren	24
Theux	68	Walcourt	48	Yburg	150
Thiel	89	Waldorf	95	Ypres	31
Thieit	7	Waller	4	Ivoir	50
Thorout	30	Wallerhelm	102
		Waremmes	64	Zell	152
		Warfusse	54	Zons	93
		Wasserbillig	58	Zuid Beveland	24
		Waterloo	40	Zwyndrecht	79
		Watreloos	16	Zwingerberg	126

1. The first part of the document is a list of names and addresses of the members of the committee.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE.

HOTEL NUELLENS, opposite the Fontaine Eliza, and situated in the most fashionable part of the city, has great attractions to tourists and travellers. This house possesses excellent accommodation for single persons or large families, and the Cuisine department will afford satisfaction to the most fastidious taste. Extract from the 18th Edition of Murray's Hand-Book:—"This Hotel, in the best situation, &c., &c., is recommended as capital." Table d'Hôte at 1½ and 5 clock. [1]

HOTEL DU GRAND MONARQUE.—DREMEL'S HOTEL at AIX LA CHAPELLE.—This magnificent and large Hotel, for Families and single Travellers, continues to maintain its European reputation for being the favoured residence of travellers of all nations. The proprietor, Mr. FRITZ DREMEL, obtained this unusual patronage by the cleanliness and comfort of his apartments (all the beds being of new construction), the richness and excellence of its viands and wines, added to the attention and civility of the attendants. The first Mineral Bath Establishment is attached to the Hotel. [2]

HOTEL DES QUATRE SAISONS.—Situated in the best part of the city, opposite the Opera-House, and in the vicinity of the Baths, and all public amusements. Apartments, large and small, handsomely furnished, and waited upon by attentive servants. Two superior Table d'Hôtes a day. Mr. HUBER also begs to recommend the HOTEL DES BAINS DE LA ROSE, OUBRETTE, of which he is likewise Proprietor. It is within two minutes' walk of the city, and has hot Mineral Springs and Baths, and very superior accommodations. [3]

AMSTERDAM.

BRACK'S DOELEN HOTEL.—Situated in the centre of the Town, and most convenient for Visitors on pleasure or business. It commands a splendid view of the Quay, &c., and, being conducted on a liberal scale, it is patronised by the highest classes of society in Holland. It is also much frequented by English Travellers, for the comfort and first-rate accommodation it affords, as well as for the invariable civility shown to visitors. Cold and Warm Baths may be had at any hour—arrangements for hire—Table de Hôte at half-past 4, or dinner à la carte. [4]

ANTWERP.

HOTEL DU PARC.—MR. ARRABIT, Proprietor.—This old-established and favourite House is situated in the pleasantest part of the town, facing the Cathedral, and next door to the General Post Office. It has been recently refitted, and elegantly furnished throughout, and greatly improved in every respect, to render it a comfortable and suitable Hotel for English families, or single travellers, visiting or passing through Antwerp to or from the Rhine. Mrs. ARRABIT being English, respectfully assures English tourists, they will find her Hotel a highly comfortable, agreeable, and respectable residence. A good Table de Hôte at 2 and 5 o'clock. Excellent sound wines. It is the only hotel in Antwerp possessing hot and cold baths. [5]

BADEN-BADEN.

BATHS OF BADEN-BADEN.

THE SEASON COMMENCES THE 1st OF MAY,

And continues to the 31st of October.

THE OFFICIAL LIST,—"The Bade Blut Amtliche Fremden Liste," shows that more than fifty thousand tourists, belonging to all classes of society, visited Baden every year. Railway from Paris to Baden-Baden in 14 hours. See advertisement in the Continental Guide for June, July, and August, 1857. [6]

VICTORIA HOTEL—F. and PH. GROSHOLZ, Proprietors—is near the Kursaal. A first-rate well-known Hotel, patronised by English and American families. 140 Rooms and Saloons, new and elegant. An excellent Table d'Hôte. Prompt attendance. Cleanliness and moderate charges. [7]

BADEN-BADEN—Continued.HOTEL DE HOLLANDE.—F. A. ZACHMANN and A. ROESSLER, Proprietors.

This favourite and first-class Hotel, situated near the Kursaal, commands one of the most charming views in the city. The increase of business rendering it necessary to enlarge the Hotel, the Proprietors, in extending the premises, have introduced additional improvements, and have placed conveniences (i.e., w.c.) upon every floor.

The Hotel now consists of more than a hundred sleeping apartments, elegant sitting-rooms, and a garden for the use of visitors. It is constructed under the immediate superintendence of the Proprietor, who endeavours, by the most judicious and exceedingly moderate prices, to merit the continued patronage of English visitors. Galignani's and other Journals. The Wines of this Hotel are reputed of the best quality in Baden.

Breakfast, 36 kr. Tea, 48 kr. Dinner at the table d'hôte, at one, including Wine, 1 fl. 12 kr. Dinner at five, including wine, 1 fl. 26 kr. Fixed moderate charges for servants.

HOTEL DE LA COUR DE BADE, (BADISCHER HOF).—First-rate.

Excellent Table d'Hôte at one and five; baths at the hotel; extensive and splendid gardens; quiet and comfortable. Landlord, A. Rheinboldt. Not to be confounded with the Hotel de la Ville de Bade, opposite the Railway Station. [3]

HOTEL DE RUSSIE.—G. JUNG, Proprietor—most delightfully situated near the Kursaal and Railway Station, is patronised by the elite and fashionable visitors to Baden-Baden. English families will find this a very desirable residence, at which there is a choice of large or small apartments, well furnished and comfortable; and no expense is spared to render the Hotel deserving their patronage. The Hotel is celebrated for its cuisine, cleanliness, and good attendance. [3]

B O N N.THE GOLDEN STAR HOTEL, patronised by the English Royal Family

the English Nobility and Gentry, is the nearest Hotel to the Railway Terminus, and to the landing places of the Rhine Steam-boats. The Proprietor, Mr. J. SCHMIDT, begs leave to recommend his Hotel to English Tourists. The apartments are furnished and carpeted throughout in the English style, and the charges are moderate. Apartments during the Winter at moderate prices. The London Times and New York Herald taken in during whole year. Six excellent pianos to be found in the different sitting-rooms. [3]

GRAND HOTEL ROYAL.—This excellent Hotel, one of the best on the continent, is charmingly situated on the banks of the Rhine, commands the most beautiful view of the Seven Mountains facing the landing-place of the Rhine steamers, and near the railway station. This hotel combines every comfort with moderate charges; and its situation is so convenient for travellers will find it a highly agreeable place of residence, or of temporary sojourn, to which a splendid garden of four acres long, laid out in the English style, will greatly contribute. For families or single persons desirous to stay for the winter, the most advantageous arrangement can be made for board and lodging. Table d'Hôte at half-past 1 and 5 o'clock. [3]

HOTEL DE TREVES.—A very nice and cleanly kept house, facing the Town Hall, and the most characteristic market and market place. Good Table d'Hôte at 5 o'clock, or private dinners at any hour, prepared by a first-rate French Man Cook. Good attendance at very reasonable charges. The Landlord, Mr. Waldschmidt, speaks English, and will be happy to meet English families and single travellers as comfortable as possible. Advantageous arrangements for Board and Lodging can be made for families intending to remain during the winter. [3]

BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT, 87, Rue Neuve Chaussée.—Madame L.

CAMUS has greatly enlarged the above well-known Establishment, situated in one of the best streets near the port. Terms, per week, including attendance from 1st November, to 1st June, 18s. to 26s. June to November 21s. to 41s. N.B. Private sitting rooms if required. [3]

BREMEN.

HILLMAN'S HOTEL.—This magnificent and large Hotel, which is the first in Bremen, is situated on the most beautiful part of the public walks, in the immediate vicinity of the Railway Station, the Exchange, and Theatre; containing 100 bed rooms, elegant saloons and bathing rooms. A handsome Reading room is attached to the Hotel, which is supplied with a selection of 24 English, French, and German newspapers. [15]

HOTEL DE L'EUROPE.—ALBERTI and C. A. SCHULZE, Proprietors.—This splendid Hotel has been newly opened, and offers the greatest advantages for Families and Travellers visiting Bremen. It is situated on the Boulevard, within a few minutes' walk of the Railway Station, Post-Office, and Theatres. A first-rate Table d'Hôte every day at 2 o'clock. English and French spoken by both Proprietors and servants of the Hotel. Advantageous arrangements made with Families remaining for a period. This Hotel has eighty first-class Beds, independent of several suites of Apartments for Families. The English and French journals are taken in. Warm and Cold Baths. [16]

BRUGES.

HOTEL FLEUR DE BLE.—A large Hotel, with a fine Garden, situated in the centre of the town, adjoining the Theatre—recently taken by Mr. MERS GARNOT, who has newly furnished and re-embellished it throughout. Large and small Apartments, elegantly and comfortably furnished, to be hired at moderate prices. Superior Table d'Hôte, and Wines of the best quality. Two handsome Carriages start daily, during the summer months, from this Hotel for Blankenberge; and an Omnibus from the Hotel waits the arrival of every train at the railway station. English, French, and German spoken. [17]

BRUSSELS.

HOTEL DE L'EUROPE, PLACE ROYALE.—This Hotel, second to none in Europe for situation, elegance and comfort, contains large suites of apartments, sumptuously furnished for families, fitted up with every possible convenience, and good bed-rooms, well lighted, ventilated, and scrupulously clean. During the winter arrangements are made with families for board and lodging according to agreement. Private Dinners at all hours. An excellent Table d'Hôte très recherché at five daily. The Manager is an Englishman. [18]

HOTEL DE FRANCE, RUE ROYALE, facing the Park.—MISS PORTER, the Proprietress, respectfully tenders her grateful thanks for the patronage she continues to be honoured with; and begs to assure Travellers visiting Brussels, it is her constant study to render the Hotel de France worthy of its reputation. It has been considerably enlarged by the addition of the adjoining house, which has been fitted up in a superior manner for the accommodation of Families or single persons, and which can be hired separately during the winter months. The Proprietress exercises the strictest surveillance over every part of her establishment. She is likewise particularly anxious to protect visitors during their stay at the Hotel, from being imposed upon by Commissioners, &c. Table d'Hôte at 5. [19]

HOTEL DE BELLE VUE, PLACE ROYALE.—This unrivalled Establishment, under the superintendence of MADAME DE PROFT, maintains its European reputation, and recommends itself to the patronage of the Nobility, Gentry, and Travellers, indiscriminately, of all Countries. Carriages belonging to the Hotel may be had for visiting the town or the environs of Brussels. [20]

HOTEL DE L'UNIVERS, situated in the heart of the city. MR. PRION, Proprietor.—The great advantage of this Hotel, in addition to the numerous sleeping rooms and private apartments attached to it, is, that there is a large garden beautifully laid out for the use of visitors. Table d'Hôte at half-past four, which continues to deserve the same celebrity and patronage it has hitherto enjoyed. Apartments during the winter at moderate prices. [22]

HOTEL DE FLANDRE, PLACE ROYALE.—This old established and highly recommended Hotel, which has been considerably enlarged, is still conducted by Madame Basten: its situation in the Place Royale, the excellency of the Table d'Hôte and Wines, added to the attention and civility shown to all visitors, have made it deservedly popular. Passengers are recommended not to permit themselves to be misled by Tonters, or to be put down at the wrong Hotel by omnibus conductors. [21]

BRUSSELS—Continued.

THE GRAND HOTEL DE SAXE, RUE NEUVE, 77 & 79,

Kept by a Swiss, is admirably situated near the Boulevards, Theatres, and RAILWAY STATIONS, and offers to Families and single Travellers, spacious, comfortable, and airy apartments; newly furnished and decorated. There is also a garden for the use of visitors.

FIXED PRICES: Breakfast, 1 franc; Table d'Hôte at Five o'clock, 3 francs—most excellent; sitting-rooms, 3 to 5 francs; bedrooms, 1½ to 2½ francs.

Excellent wines and good attendance.

From the 1st October, Families can be accommodated with board and lodging during the winter months, at exceedingly reasonable terms; living as privately with all the comforts and other advantages not to be had at a boarding-house.

The Reading-room is supplied with foreign newspapers, including the London Times and New York Herald.

English Mail Coaches start every day except Sundays, from the Hotel for Waterloo, one at nine o'clock and the other at ten.

EUGENE KERVAND, Proprietor.

35]

HOTEL DE LA GRAND BRETAGNE, PLACE ROYALE.—The splendid situation of this Hotel in the upper town, at the corner of the Montagne de la Cour, its southern aspect overlooking the Place Royale, its proximity to the Park, the Museum, the Palace and public buildings, recommend it to the patronage of travellers visiting this beautiful city. It affords comfortable accommodation for large families or single persons at reasonable charges. Table d'Hôte—half past Two o'clock, 2½ fr.; at Five o'clock, 3fr. Advantageous arrangements made with families during the winter months.

[23.]

HOTEL WINDSOR, 14, RUE DE LA REGENCE, PLACE ROYALE.—This Hotel is situated in the healthiest part of Brussels, and deserves the attention of travellers for its cleanliness and moderate prices. Bedrooms from 1 to 2 francs, according to the floor. Comfortable apartments, consisting of a saloon with 2, 3, or 4 bedrooms, from 6 to 10 francs per day. Breakfasts, comprising tea or coffee, bread and butter, eggs or cold meat, 1fr. to 25 cts. Dinner at Table d'Hôte, 2fr. 50 cents. Private Dinners from three francs and upwards. Very advantageous terms made for the winter season. Excellent wines at very reasonable prices. Boarders taken by the week or month.

[24.]

BOARDING and LODGING HOUSE.—MRS HAYDON'S highly respectable establishment, No. 27, QUARTIER LOUISE, is situated in the most pleasant and salubrious Boulevard of Brussels. It combines the quiet comfort of a desirable home with the advantages of good society.

25

HORTON'S PRINCE OF WALES—English Tavern and Chop-house, Rue Villa-Hermosa; the first street on the right hand in the Montagne de la Cour, leading from the Place Royale. soup, Rump Steaks, and Chops at all hours. Excellent Wines and Spirits. English Ales and Porter on draught. Good and clean Beds. Times newspaper. N.B.—Passengers booked for the Waterloo Coaches.

27

LACE MANUFACTORY.—Ladies desirous of purchasing the genuine Brussels and Valenciennes lace, or Mechlin Point, are invited to visit the Celebrated Establishment of Mr. VANDERKELLEN BRESSEN, No. 248. and No. 1, Rue du Marquis, near the Cathedral of St. Gudule, where they may witness the process of manufacturing lace of the finest texture, and inspecting an unrivalled Stock of Royal Black Lace, and various articles of the Richest and Newest Patterns, at fixed prices. Mr. V. B. is the recipient of the Prize medal of the Great Exhibition, and the Gold Medal of the Belgian Government. Visitors should be particular in not mistaking the House, or confounding this Establishment with others, which may be easily avoided, as the NAME is ON THE DOOR. Mr. V. B. was also awarded the First Class Medal at the Paris Exhibition.

26

BRUSSELS—Continued.

M^R. ALEX, HONORARY SURGEON-DENTIST TO HIS MAJESTY LEOPOLD, KING OF THE BELGIANS,

No. 3, Place Belliard, opposite the Park at Brussels; and at No. 31, New Bridge Street, Blackfriars, London.

M^R. ALEX has the the honour to inform the public that from the number of years he has been in practice, he has been enabled to introduce many improvements in his Art (approved of by the faculty), among which he has of late taken out a Patent for a system of placing Artificial Teeth without wires or ligatures of any description, which surpasses anything known up to the present period. Those Teeth being of composition are warranted never to decompose or change colour; and they are so accurately adapted to the gums as to defy the closest scrutiny. M^R. ALEX's system of regulating teeth during second Dentition is acknowledged to be the most rapid and the most efficacious; as by his method he is enabled to effect in one week quite as great a change as can be accomplished by the old method in three months.

Stopping Teeth with Gold or Cement. Cleaning, Extracting, and every operation appertaining to the Art of Dental Surgery and mechanism, is performed upon the most approved and scientific principles.—No. 3, Place Belliard: at home from Ten till Four daily. Continental Charges. 29

TEA AND CIGAR WAREHOUSE.

WHOLESALE, RETAIL, AND EXPORTATION WAREHOUSE FOR DUREZ'S EAU DE BRUXELLES,

No. 10, Rue Neuve, near the Place de la Monnaie.

THE EAU DE BRUSSELS, composed of the most exquisite and spirituous aromatics is now in general use for the Toilet and Bath, as it softens and whitens the skin, and diffuses a refreshing perfume at the same time. The Aroma or "bouquet" of the Eau de Bruxelles, is quite unequalled for its power and richness, and its reviving properties. A few drops poured on a handkerchief, give a perfume for eight days afterwards. Price, 1 fr. 50 cents per bottle.

DUREZ'S TOILET VINEGAR, 1 fr. 25 c.

To be had at the principal perfumers in Brussels, and the provincial towns in Belgium.

Sole Agent or Dépôt for Prussia, Mr. Ludwig, formerly Rey, 33, Charlottenstrasse, Berlin.

Sole Agents for England, Messrs W. Riddell & Co., 5, Sherborn Lane, King William Street, London.

30

CASSEL, HESSE.

HOTEL DE L'EMPEREUR ROMAN—This celebrated and extensive Hotel is now conducted by Mr. BERNHARD LANG, who has particularly directed his attention to secure to his guests true English comfort. Table d'Hôte at 1 o'clock. Dinners and Suppers, in private rooms, served at any hour. For the convenience of families, all kinds of Carriages are kept at this Establishment—terms moderate. English and most of the Continental languages spoken, and English and other papers taken in. For the quality of its Wines this House enjoys the highest reputation. [81

CHALONS-SUR-MARNE.

HOTELS DE LA CLOCHE DU PALAIS ROYAL.—M. JANNAUX, Proprietor.—Both of these Hotels are situated in the centre of the town, within five minutes of the Railway Station. Persons desirous of having a private carriage to convey their families from the station, have only to address a few lines to the landlord, when conveyances for themselves and servants will await their arrival, and apartments be prepared for their reception. Carriages for excursions can be had at the hotel's. [34

COBLENTZ.

HOTEL DE BELLE VUE.—Mr. M. HOCHÉ, Proprietor.—This favourite and first class Hotel, to which the Hotel des Trois Suisses has been added, pleasantly situated, close to the landing-place of the Steam-boats, facing the Rhine, [and commanding a most beautiful view of the Castle of Ehrenbreitstein—] is fitted-up in a very superior style, and conducted in a manner to deserve the patronage it enjoys among the English nobility and gentry, who will find it a most desirable residence for comfort and accommodation—which nothing can surpass—and for civility and attention. [32

COBLENZ-Continued.

HOTEL DU GEANT.—M. SCHURTZ, Proprietor. This well-known and favourite first-class Hotel is delightfully situated opposite the castle of Ehrenbreitstein; it is the nearest to the landing place of the Steamers, and commands a most beautiful view of the Rhine and surrounding country. This highly recommended establishment combines superior accommodation with moderate prices. [38]

COLOGNE.

HOTEL DISCH, situated in Bridge Street—A first-rate house, very highly recommended, as combining good accommodation with moderate charges. The proprietors, Messieurs DISCH & CAPELLAN, keep a large assortment of the best stock of Moselle Wines for wholesale. [35]

THE HOTEL ROYAL, facing or overlooking the Rhine, commands an extensive view of this noble river. This well-known Hotel contains numerous suites of apartments for the accommodation of families visiting Cologne; and, in consequence of the Hotel having been recently enlarged, there are several apartments on the ground floor. Travellers will find this house extremely convenient for landing from, or embarking on board of, the Rhine Steamers. Table d'Hôte at one and five o'clock. Omnibuses and private carriages belonging to the hotel. [36]

THE HOTEL DE HOLLANDE

IN DELIGHTFULLY SITUATED

OPPOSITE THE STARTING AND LANDING PLACE OF THE RHINE STEAMERS,

AND IN THE VICINITY

OF THE BERLIN RAILWAY STATION.

THE Apartments are furnished with English comfort, being carpeted throughout, and suited to large Families, as well as Single Gentlemen. It offers, from its belvedere, built in the veranda style, as well as from its windows,

THE FINEST VIEW OFTHE RHINE, AND A PANORAMA OF COLOGNE.

The accommodation will be found to combine comfort and cleanliness, a perfect cuisine and exquisite Wines—attentive servants—and moderate charges.

OMNIBUSES AND PRIVATE CARRIAGES ATTACHED TO THE HOTEL. 37

HOTEL DU RHIN, RHENISH HOTEL, HAY MARKET, COLOGNE.—Mr. Riedel, the present proprietor of this first-rate Hotel, formerly kept by Mr. Staudt, begs leave to recommend it to travellers. The situation of this hotel, in the centre of the town, near the river, its vicinity to the landing place of all the Steamers and Railway Station, the comfort and elegance of its apartments, and the good accommodation it affords at moderate prices, render it a most desirable residence for travellers passing through Cologne. [39]

COLOGNE—Continued.

HOTEL DE COLOGNE.—This well-known old-established and favourite Hotel is delightfully situated on the banks of the Rhine, opposite the landing and embarking places of the Steamers, and near the Railway Stations. Mr. Harperath, the proprietor, has the honour to acquaint visitors to this city that his house is fitted up with every regard to comfort travellers can desire. [38]

FREDRICH'S HOF.—HOTEL JOOS, by Mr. JOOS, Rue Casino and Pepin. Prices—Lodging, 1 fr. 25 c.; Breakfast (Tea or Coffee), 1 fr.; Dinner (Table d'Hôte at one o'clock), 2 frs.; Private Dinner at any hour, 3 frs.
This Hotel has this year been newly restored and furnished, situated in the most beautiful part of the city, near the Cathedral, and by the side of the English Church, very highly recommended, as combining good accommodation with very moderate charges. French and English spoken. It is also the nearest Hotel to the Railway Station for Bonn. [40]

HOTEL DE BRUXELLES, Situated close to the Belgian and Paris Railway Stations, is recommended to the notice of travellers for its comfortable accommodation and moderate charges, viz.:—Bedroom and Breakfast, 2 frs. 25 c.; Dinner and Wine at Table d'Hôte, 2 frs. 50 c.; Tea, 1 fr. Carriages convey travellers from the Railway Stations and Steamboat Wharfs to the Hotel. [41]

DIEPPE.

HOTEL DES ARMES DE FRANCE, GRANDE RUE, 44 and 46. This Hotel is situated in the most agreeable part of the town, within a few minutes' walk of the Baths. Its vicinity to the landing of the Newhaven Steamers renders the situation of this establishment most desirable; and, in returning sincere thanks for the patronage it has hitherto enjoyed, Madame DURAND hopes by unremitting attention to be favoured with a continuance of the same. Arrangements on reasonable terms may be made with families, by the week or the month, and during the winter season. Excellent stabling and lock-up coach houses. [42]

DIJON.

HOTEL DU PARC.—Mr. RIPARD, ainé, Proprietor.—The situation of this Hotel, in the centre of the town, is very convenient; it commands a delightful view. English travellers honouring this Hotel with their company will experience every possible attention. The accommodation consists of cheerful and elegant sitting-rooms, spacious and airy Bed-rooms.

N.B.—Return Post Carriages may always be had at this Hotel for Switzerland or Italy; and at Geneva corresponding return Post Carriages may be had for Dijon, the first station of the Paris Railway. [43]

DRESDEN.

HOTEL ZUM KRONPRINZ: Crown Prince Hotel. Proprietors, Messrs. Moritz and Schulze. This splendid first-class Hotel is situated in the most beautiful street in Dresden, the Hauptstrasse, near all the principal Railway Stations. Being one of the largest Hotels in Saxony it offers a variety of accommodation, a large number of bedrooms, numerous private sitting rooms, elegant saloons, &c., comfortably furnished, combining the best of accommodation for families or single gentlemen, at moderate charges. Table d'Hôte at one o'clock. Private Dinners at any hour. [44]

DUSSELDORF.

HOTEL of the PRINCE of PRUSSIA situated very near the Cologne and Berlin, the Dusseldorf and Elberfeld, and the Dusseldorf and Aix-la-Chapelle Railway. This Hotel, the largest in the town, has a splendid garden, and is particularly recommended for its cleanliness and its moderate charges. [45]

FRANKFORT-ON-THE-MAINE.

HOTEL OF THE ROMAN EMPEROR.—Proprietors, MESSRS. LOHR, AND ALTEN.—This favourite and first class Hotel, situate in the centre of this fine City, is conducted under the superintendence of the Proprietors, who endeavour, by the most strict attention and moderate rates, to merit the continued patronage of English visitors. [46]

FREIBURG-IN-BRESGAU (Duchy of Baden).

HOTEL ZAHRINGER HOF.—Mr. G. H. SOMMER, Proprietor.—This comfortable Family Hotel, which is the first in the town, has been greatly improved and enlarged by the present proprietor. Carriages and Horses for excursion to the Hohenstall and Switzerland, are procured by the landlord of this Hotel at a moment's notice; and, to avoid any misunderstanding with the coachman, Mr. S. writes the agreements. [47]

DEUTSCHER HOF: HOTEL D'ALLEMAGNE, GUSTAV RETFUS, Proprietor.—This Hotel, conducted during the last nine years by Mr. R., is much patronised by English travellers. The proprietor, having resided in England, is acquainted with their habits, and is always ready to assist them in their travelling arrangements. Pension during the winter at an economical rate. [48]

GENEVA (Switzerland).

BEST GENEVA WATCHES, 183, Rue de Rhone.—Mr. G. ROCH, being an old-established and well-known manufacturer, is enabled to sell to English Travellers best Geneva Watches of superior quality at very low prices, wholesale or retail. [51]

G H E N T.

HOTEL DE LA POSTE.—A first-rate house, situated in the Place d'Armes.—The accommodation it affords is both elegant and comfortable. The apartments are spacious and airy, well-furnished and convenient, adapted for large Families or single Travellers. Mr. PAUW begs to inform the English nobility and gentry visiting Ghent, they will find his Establishment a cheerful and respectable residence, where every attention will be paid to their comfort. An excellent Table d'Hôte and good Wines, with prompt attendance. [49]

HOTEL DE FLANDRE.—Mr. O. Dubus, the proprietor of this old established and favourite Hotel, has the honour to acquaint visitors to this city that his house is fitted up with every regard to comfort travellers can desire. Breakfast, 1 fr.; Dinner, 2 fr.; half a bottle of Wine, 1½ fr.; Tea, 1 fr. Civil and attentive servants.

The Hotel is situated in the centre of the town, close to all the principal buildings, churches, &c. Families will find it a desirable residence. Large and small apartments at moderate prices. Advantageous arrangements made with Families during the winter season. [50]

T H E H A G U E.

HOTEL PAULEZ.—Mr. F. Paulez, Proprietor.—This Hotel has been entirely refitted and re-furnished throughout in the best taste possible, and it is now re-opened to the public. It is situated in the finest quarter of the city, facing the theatre. The Table d'Hôte at half-past four, served with the greatest care, and très recherché, is frequented by good society. Every comfort and convenience of modern invention that the most fastidious traveller can wish will be found in this establishment. The Hotel has recently been enlarged, and now contains several additional apartments. [52]

HANOVER.

THE UNION HOTEL, C. M. REISS, Proprietor, is the nearest Hotel to the Railway Station. It is conveniently situated for travellers, and commands a fine and salubrious aspect. Furnished in the best modern style, it affords accommodation for a large number of travellers, who will find the best of refreshments are supplied at reasonable prices. [53]

HEIDELBERG.

HOTEL PRINCE CHARLES.—In the Market-place, nearest to the Castle, with a fine view of the ruins of the Castle. This Hotel, well known as a first rate house, is without question the largest and best situated establishment in the town. It has been lately enlarged and embellished, and is conducted on a most liberal scale under the personal superintendence of the proprietors. Table d'Hôte at 1 and 5 o'clock. An arrangement for board and lodging may be made for families and single gentlemen during the winter at very moderate prices. English divine service is performed every Sunday in the town. [54]

THE EAGLE (or ADLER) HOTEL, in the Grand Place, commands a beautiful view of the celebrated castle of Heidelberg, and surrounding country. Travellers visiting this highly interesting town will find this house everything desirable. LONDON TIMES taken in, baths in the Hotel, carriages before the door. Mr. Lehr, under whose personal superintendence the Hotel is conducted, speaks English and French, as do the servants. Two superior Table d'Hôtes at 1 and 5 o'clock. [55]

THE COURT OF BADEN HOTEL ranks amongst the best in Germany. Situate in the centre of the town, nearest to the railway station, commanding a beautiful view of the environs. The rooms are comfortably furnished for families or single gentlemen. Attendance good, and prices moderate. [56]

HOTEL DE HOLLANDE.—Conveniently situated in the centre of the town, the nearest to the landing place of the Steam-boats, in the immediate neighbourhood of the Neckar, the celebrated castle, and all the most attractive points of view. Quiet, and reasonable charges; strongly recommended for its cleanliness, civility, and good attendance. [57]

LEIPSIC.

HOTEL DE POLOGNE.—Messrs. GROSSBERGER and KUHL beg to call the attention of Visitors to Leipsic to their well-known commodious Establishment, situate in the centre of the town, near the Railway Station and Theatre, replete with every comfort, and containing 136 Bed Rooms, two large and elegant Saloons, Reading Room, Refreshment Room, and Bathing Rooms. Terms moderate. Suitable accommodation for Nobility, Families, or Single Travellers, on business or pleasure. [58]

LIEGE.

HOTEL DE SUÈDE (proprietor Mr. Dalimer), one of the finest and best in Belgium, and the most frequented at Liege, is admirably situated, facing the Royal Theatre, the Boulevards, and nearest the Railway Station and Steam Boats. Patronised by Travellers of all nations; it possesses an excellent Cuisine, and is favourably known for its scrupulous cleanliness, good attendance, and reasonable prices.—Large and small Apartments, combining every domestic comfort; Hot Baths to be had.

The dining saloon is splendid and elegant, and well supplied with foreign Newspapers, including the London Times. English spoken. [59]

LYONS.

GRAND HOTEL DE L'UNIVERS, 4, RUE DE BOURBON, 4, Place Bellecour, situated near the Post-office. Messrs. GLOVER & VUFFRAY have the honour to inform the Nobility and Travellers, that this excellent Hotel is fitted up in the English style, one of the partners being an Englishman. The Hotel is patronised by families of the first distinction of every nation, and acknowledged to be one of the best and cleanest in France. Travellers are particularly requested not to attend to Touts, Porters, &c., for, as they receive no bribe, they will be sure to say that the Hotel is shut up, quite full, or too far off, and those who listen to such suggestions will be deceived. Charges moderate. Large and small apartments. Excellent Table d'Hôte. Private Dinners. Stabling and Lock-up Coach Houses. Omnibuses belonging to this Hotel convey passengers to and from the Ballwa Station and Steam Boats. [60]

MARSEILLES.

HOTEL D'ORIENT, 17, Rue Grignan, kept by Mr. Borel, Breveté by the Ex-Royal Family of France, the Courts of Spain, of Naples, of Turin, and of Egypt. [61]

MILAN.

MILAN, LOMBARDY.—HOTEL DE LA GRANDE BRETAGNE.—
 Vital, Biganzoli, situated CORNICA DELLA PALLA, 3323, near the Duomo. Large and small apartments; Table d'Hôte delicately and abundantly served; Single Rooms for Bachelors; Lock-up Coach-houses; Baths; Galignani's Messenger taken in; English and French spoken. The Hotel is recommended in Murray's Handbook, and is well known to all travellers who have honoured it hitherto for its reasonable prices, great comfort, and excellent situation. [62]

OSTEND.

HOTEL FONTAINE.—This Hotel, having been patronised by H. R. H.
 Prince Albert, H. R. H. the Duchess of Kent, H. R. H. the Prince Royal of Prussia, is frequented by the élite of English and Foreign Society. It is situated in the Rue Longue. The apartments are tastefully and elegantly furnished, they are large and airy, and in general command a view of the sea.
 An Omnibus conveys Travellers to and from the Railway Station. After the Bathing Season arrangements are made to Board and Lodge Families, on reasonable terms. [64]

HOTEL D'ALLEMAGNE.—German Hotel, facing the railway station, and close to the harbour. This first-rate Hotel, with a very fine view of the sea, is one of the most popular establishments on the Continent; the charges are moderate, and its Table d'Hôte is deservedly celebrated. Mr. Richard Wagner, the Proprietor since 1846, trusts by unremitting attention to the comforts of his guests, to merit the preference his Hotel has hitherto enjoyed. [65]

MARITAN'S NEW HOTEL—close to the harbour, commands a very fine view of the sea. Omnibuses convey passengers from the Steam-ports or Trains to this Hotel, which is always open on their arrival, and at which the best of refreshments and accommodation can be had, at the following moderate prices. Breakfast from 1 fr. to 1½ fr. Tea 1½ fr. Table de Hôte dinner at 2 o'clock, 2½ fr. At 5 o'clock, 3 fr. Mr. Maritan having been honoured for many years with the patronage of the English travellers, while co-proprietor of the Hotel d'Allemagne from 1846—53, has spared no expense to render his new Hotel Maritan equal to the best on the Continent, and worthy of their future patronage. It is elegantly furnished throughout, contains 80 Bed-rooms, numerous Sitting-rooms, and a Dining-room for 150. [66]

PARIS.

HOTEL DE NORMANDIE, 240, RUE ST. HONORE.—The above Hotel possesses advantages for Travellers rarely to be met with. It is in the vicinity of the principal Public Establishments, in the most favourable situation for pleasure as well as business, and it is the constant aim of the Proprietor to merit patronage by affording every comfort at the most moderate charges. Each visitor may be furnished with a Bed-room, Breakfast, Dinner at Table d'Hôte, with a bottle of good Burgundy Wine, at 5s. 6d. and 6s. per day, including lights and servants
 N.B.—English spoken by the landlord and servants. [66]

SCHWALBACH (Nassau).

HOTEL THE DUKE OF NASSAU.

Proprietor.—J. WILHELMY.

THIS FIRST CLASS HOTEL, Patronised by the Nobility and Families of the first distinction in England and on the Continent, delightfully situated near the mineral springs, baths, and public promenades, commanding fine views of the surrounding country, consists of suites of elegantly furnished apartments for Families and Gentlemen, replete with comfort, and reasonable charges. Wines of the first vintage. The Times newspaper, and Punch regularly taken. [67]

STETTIN.

HOTEL DE PRUSSE.—This first-class Hotel has 60 rooms, handsomely and comfortably furnished. Table d'Hôte at two o'clock. Restaurant à la carte, and refectory similar to those at Hamburg, supplying hot or cold breakfast, composed of all the delicacies of the season, at any hour. Dépôt of the best English oysters. [70]

STRASBOURG.

HOTEL DE PARIS.—MR. J. DIEMER, Proprietor of this unrivalled Establishment, respectfully offers his grateful acknowledgments to the English Nobility and Gentry for their continued patronage, and avails himself of this occasion to assure Travellers visiting Strasbourg that no efforts will be spared on his part to render their sojourn at the above Hotel both comfortable and satisfactory. [68.]

GRAND HOTEL DE LA FLEUR.—W. A. DOERR, Proprietor. In a central situation, near the Cathedral. Table d'Hôte at One and Five o'clock. Travellers will find the accommodation combines elegance with comfort and prompt attendance. Excellent cuisine and good apartments. This Hotel is celebrated as having been inhabited by the principal persons connected with the project of Prince Napoleon in 1836. The apartments are still shown which those personages occupied at that period. English spoken. Divine Service in English is performed in this Hotel, in the private Saloon, specially devoted to that purpose. [69]

VIENNA.

THE EMPRESS ELISABETH HOTEL—KAISERIN ELISABETH.—With two Table d'Hôtes, is well situated near St. Stephen's square, and has both large and small apartments, including fine dining, reading, and drawing-rooms, with excellent baths, and every modern improvement. English spoken. Attendance unexceptionable. Charges moderate. Cuisine superior. Travellers can obtain every information at the landlord's office. Foreign monies taken at the rate of exchange. N. Y. Herald, London Times, Galignani, &c. P. Notice.—The Cab fares from the various stations are fixed by law; and these will be paid by the Hotel porter, and entered into each traveller's account. Caution.—Travellers visiting Vienna for the first time, and intending to stay at the above-mentioned Hotel, are entreated to pay no attention to any difficulties or objections, but to insist on their driver really taking them to the aforesaid Hotel. A. and F. Baur are also proprietors of the grand Hotel Kaiserin Elisabeth at Ischl, Salskammergut. [71.]

WIESBADEN.

HOTEL DE NASSAU.—MR. GOETZ, Proprietor. A first-rate, well-furnished, quiet Hotel, in the Great Square, opposite the Kursaal, and close to the theatre. Charges reasonable. (Murray's Handbook, 1862, page 211.) Mineral and cold baths of all descriptions, newly fitted up in the English style. The Bath-master and mistress speak English. Galignani and Times journals. Table d'Hôte at One and Four o'clock. [72.]

THOMAS PEARCE AND SON, 23, LUDGATE HILL, LONDON, E.C.

The largest and most beautiful Stock of
CRYSTAL CHANDELIERS AND LUSTRES
In London (for either Gas or Candles), all designed and manufactured by Thomas Pearce & Son.

A great variety of new and good patterns in DINNER, DESSERT, TEA, AND TOILET SERVICES,
At prices to suit every class of purchasers.

RICHLY-CUT TABLE GLASS,
Of singularly beautiful quality, comprising Decanters, Wine Glasses, Tumblers, Carafa's, &c., and every other article that can be required for the table.

THE SELECTION OF ORNAMENTS

CONTAINS UNRIVALLED FOR ITS GREAT VARIETY, UNCOMMON CHARACTER, AND GOOD TASTE.

The whole Stock offers advantages to PARTIES FURNISHING not to be met with elsewhere, while the prices are lower than usual.

ESTABLISHED UPWARDS OF 80 YEARS.

[73.]

WEAK LEGS, KNEES, AND ANKLES.

G. CRADDOCK,

35, LEICESTER SQUARE,

Many years with the late firm of Shoolbred & Co., of Jermyn Street, St. James's,

BEGS to announce his IMPROVED ELASTIC STOCKINGS, KNEE CAPS, SOCKS, &c., made either to lace or draw on, as decidedly superior to any other article yet offered to the public for giving permanent support to the Leg in cases of WEAKNESS, VARICOSE, or ENLARGED VEINS, and DROPSICAL AFFECTIONS: to the KNEE or ANKLE JOINTS, after fracture or dislocation; and also in cases of weakness arising from Inflammation, Rheumatism, or Gout.

The ONLY HOUSE where every description of Elastic Stockings, Leggings, Knee Caps, Socks, and Belts are manufactured.

[86.]

THE NEW REGISTERED PORTMANTEAU,

REGISTERED AND MANUFACTURED BY

JOHN SOUTHGATE,

76, Watling Street, E. C.

LONDON.

THIS PORTMANTEAU is admitted by all who have used it to be the most PERFECT and USEFUL of any yet invented, and to combine all the advantages so long desired by all who travel.

The peculiar conveniences of this Portmanteau are, that it contains separate compartments for each description of Clothes, Boots, &c.; each division is kept entirely distinct, and is immediately accessible on opening the Portmanteau, without lifting or disturbing anything else. Every article is packed perfectly flat, and remains so during the whole of the journey.

It may be obtained of MR. WILKINSON, 30, Cockspur Street; of MESSRS. MOORE and Co., 14, St. James's Street, London; of MR. HUNT, Above-Bar, Southampton; of MR. BAYS, Hatter, Cambridge; of MR. ELLENGER, Granger Street, Newcastle-on-Tyne; MR. POOL, Trunk Maker, Hull and Leeds; MR. LOVE, Trunk Maker, Hull; MR. NORTHAM, Trunk Maker, opposite St. Sidwell's Church, Exeter; of most Outfitters and Saddlers throughout the Kingdom; and of

JOHN SOUTHGATE,

MANUFACTURER OF

Every Description of Portmanteaus and Travelling Equipage,

76, WATLING STREET, CITY, E. C.

MAGNUS'S ENAMELLED SLATE

MAGNUS'S SLATE BILLIARD TABLES.

The only ones that (having enamelled slate frames and solid slate legs) are suitable for exportation. Her Majesty has one in the Drawing Room at Osborne, the Duke of Wellington has one at Strathfieldsaye, and they are patronised by Noblemen in general as well as by the most scientific players.

See Reports by the Jurors at the Great Exhibition, 1851.—"Of all the objects exhibited by this Exhibitor, the Billiard Table is perhaps the most important, as decidedly superior to tables constructed of any other material. To this Exhibition the Jury have had no hesitation in awarding the Prize Medal, in acknowledgment of its admirable and useful contrivances and applications."

Although these Tables are immeasurably superior to all others, Mr. Magnus is able to supply them for less than tables with mahogany frames.

PIMLICO SLATE WORKS,

39 & 40, UPPER BELGRAVE PLACE, PIMLICO, S.W.

MAGNUS'S ENAMELLED SLATE CHIMNEYPIES

Table Tops, Cabinet Stoves, Billiard and Bagatelle Tables, Chiffoniers, Baths, Washstand Tops, Altar Tablets, Mural Tablets, Pilasters, Columns, Wall Linings, Plaster Vases, Dairy Fittings, &c., obtained the Medal of the Society of Arts, the Medal of the Great Exhibition of 1851, and two First Class Medals at the Paris Exhibition of 1855. Much cheaper, handsomer, and more durable than Marble. Also Cisterns and plain Slate Work of all descriptions.

PIMLICO SLATE WORKS,

39 & 40, UPPER BELGRAVE PLACE, PIMLICO, S.W.

MAGNUS'S CABINET-FORMED STOVE.

With open fire, double flue, and hot-air chambers. Decidedly the most economical, and comfortable stove that has been introduced to the public. In the drawing room it forms an exquisite piece of furniture, takes the place of Chimney or console table. It is composed of fire-stone and enamelled slate, instead of iron. Can be had moveable on castors, and is suitable to every apartment, and to all mansions, churches, &c.

PIMLICO SLATE WORKS,

39 and 40, Upper Belgrave Place, Pimlico, S.W.

SYDENHAM AND SONS,

WIGMORE STREET, LONDON,

who have completed the alterations and enlargement of their premises, invite attention to their extensive suite of Show Rooms.

OVENS, FENDERS, AND FIRE-IRONS,

The largest and best selection in London ;

CHURCH RANGES & COOKING APPARATUS

For large or small Establishments.

GAS FITTINGS, BATHS, &c.

And every description of General Furnishing Ironmongery.

FLAVEL'S PRIZE KITCHENER,

the only Kitchen Range which obtained a Prize Medal and Special Approbation at the Great Exhibition, 1851.

Flavel's Prize Kitchener is recommended for its superior construction and economy and cleanliness in use, and is made from 3 feet to 18 feet in width, suitable for large establishments, and arranged to supply a large quantity of Steam Kettles, Steam Boilers, &c. an effectual cure for draughts from chimneys.

SYDENHAM AND SONS
WIGMORE STREET, DISH SQUARE
LONDON ;

to be seen in the Hardware Court of the Crystal Palace, Sydenham.

With Artificial Teeth,
As fixed by Mr. Davies.

Same Face without Teeth.

MR. JOHN DAVIES,

DENTIST TO THE ROYAL FAMILY,

RUSSELL HOUSE, CORNER OF EUSTON SQUARE

Where English, French, and American Mechanics are employed on the Establishment.

THE NEW LOCK SPRING,

REGISTERED, No. 883, ACCORDING TO ACT OF PARLIAMENT,

The most Marvellous Invention in Mechanical Dentistry; preventing the accumulation of PARTICLES OF FOOD IN THE MOUTH.

MOST IMPORTANT AND GRAND DISCOVERY FOR THE TEETH.

Toothache instantaneously cured, and the decayed tooth preserved in the

A NEW AND VALUABLE COMPOSITION

For filling decayed Teeth, without the slightest pain, heat, or pressure

INCORRODIBLE MINERAL TEETH,

Unparalleled for beauty and durability,

Fixed on an entirely New and Patented Principle, from One to a Complete

 See Specimens, Court of Inventions, Crystal Palace.*

DISEASES IN THE MOUTH AND GUMS EFFECTUALLY CURED.

Loose Teeth Fastened, Irregularities attendant on Second Dentition Removed, and every operation in Dental Surgery safe and certain principles.

MR. J. DAVIES'S RENOWNED ROYAL BALMORAL TOOTH POWDER,

(By Authority),

FOR PURIFYING, PRESERVING, AND BEAUTIFYING THE TEETH AND GUMS, AND HIS GENCIVE RESTAURANT,

So highly recommended by the first of the Faculty, for Diseases of the Mouth and Gums. Prepared only by John

Mr. J. DAVIES'S professional experience of many years' standing, both in this country and on the Continent, has enabled him to offer advantages hitherto unattainable in London or Paris. His new method of fixing Artificial Teeth is fully to answer every purpose of Articulation and Mastication.

Testimonials and Opinions of the Press may be had on application. No Professional Connection with any other

RUSSELL HOUSE, CORNER OF EUSTON SQUARE

FACING ST. PANCRAS CHURCH, NEW ROAD.

ORNAMENTS for the MANTEL PIECE, &c.

STATUETTES, Vases, and Groups—both of English and Continental Manufacture—in Parian, Decorated Bisque and other Porcelain. First class Bronzes, Candelabra, &c. The Stock very large, and distinguished for its singular novelty, its beauty, and its pure taste. Prices particularly moderate.

Thomas Pearce & Son, 23, Ludgate Hill, London, E. C.

[73.]

J. H. BOOBBYER, late Sturch & Boobyer,

Established nearly 200 years, for the supply of Goods from the best Manufacturers at the lowest prices.

Wholesale and Retail Ironmongery, Brass Foundry, Nail and Tool Warehouse.

A PRIZE MEDAL for Superior Locks was awarded to J. H. BOOBBYER at the Great Exhibition of 1851, who invites the attention of Builders, &c., to his stock of Ironmongery. Brass Foundry, Nails (wrought and cut) at the lowest reduced prices; also Copper and Zinc; Patent Locks of all descriptions; China, Glass, and Wood Furnitures of all kinds, with Patent Shifting Spindles; Dr Arnott's Ventilator, 4s.; and the new registered Venetian Ventilator, so much admired, &c., 6s. 6d. each.

AGRICULTURAL DIGGING FORKS.

Patent Spade, Daisy Rake, and all kinds of Garden and other Tools.

Patent Spindled China Mortise Furniture

White	1s. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$. per set.	White China Finger Plates, 4s. per dozen.
Black	1s. 4d. "
White and Gold	2s. 0d. "

14, STANHOPE STREET, CLARE MARKET, LONDON. [81.]

CLOCKS FOR THE DINING ROOM, DRAWING ROOM, & LIBRARY.

GREAT beauty and purity of design. Works, the very best (having the latest improvements.) Prices unusually low. Assortment the largest in London. General style and finish irreproachable.

Thomas Pearce & Son, 23, Ludgate Hill, London, E. C

H. MILLS' LONDON MADE WATCHES,

WITH the Patent Lever, and other Escapement unrivalled for their durability, accuracy of performance, and low prices. Every watch is skillfully finished, and warranted for ten years.

Gold Horizontal Watches, Gold Dials, Jewelled.....	£4 10 0
Ditto ditto superior quality	6 6 0
Ditto Lever ditto, 10 holes Jewelled	6 10 0
Ditto Best London make.....	12 10 0
Silver Horizontal ditto, 4 holes Jewelled	2 5 0
Ditto Lever ditto	3 0 0
Ditto ditto, best London make.....	4 0 0

An unusually extensive stock of

SOLID GOLD GUARD AND ALBERT CHAINS.

Diamond and other Rings, Brooches, Bracelets, &c.

All of the latest and most approved designs.

SILVERSMITH AND ELECTRO-PLATER

A descriptive Pamphlet of Patterns and Prices sent free to any part of the world. Any sent free per return of post, on the receipt of post office orders payable to

HENRY MILLS,

171 & 172, OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

MODERATOR LAMPS.

THE simplicity, solidity, and careful finish of the mechanism of PEARCE and SON'S LAMPS render them less liable to derangement than any other kind, and gained for them so general a preference. The patterns are equally unexceptionable, and (by originality) combine every style that is beautiful and pure in taste.

Thomas Pearce & Son, 23, Ludgate Hill, London,

Direct Importers of only the finest Oil.

COMFORT TO THE FEET

THE PANNUS CORIUM BOOTS & SHOES

ARE the easiest and most comfortable ever invented for THE FEET; a valuable relief for CORNS, BUNIONS, GOUT, CHILBLAINS, having no drawing or painful effect on the wearer, and with the appearance of the finest A Boot or Shoe sent for the size will ensure a fit. The material sold by the yard in any

HALL and CO.,

Patentees, 2, Wellington Street, Strand,

LEADING TO WATERLOO BRIDGE, LONDON.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

OW-ROOM FOR LADIES' AND CHILDREN'S UNDER CLOTHING.

THORN,

AL MANUFACTURER OF THE PATENT ELASTIC MERINO WOOL UNDER CLOTHING
SHIRT MAKER, HOSIER, &c. &c.

IMPROVED SHAPED DRAWERS, WITH "THORN'S PATENT ELASTIC BELTS,"
UNDER WAISTCOATS, &c.

1, LUDGATE STREET, THREE DOORS FROM ST. PAUL'S.

Established upwards of Fifty Years.

[89.]

SPORT AGENCY OFFICE,
LONDON, 59, FLEET STREET, E. C.

s residing in any
te United King-
London, who de-avoid delay or can have their s obtained and t with the utmost

expedition and despatch, upon application by Letter, or otherwise, to Mr.
W. J. ADAMS, (Brad-shaw's British and Continents' Guide Office), 59, Fleet Street, E. C. as above and GENTLEMEN resident in the Country, by this arrangement, are saved the trouble of coming to London about their Passport, as it can be forwarded to them by Post (Ex Regio).

Particulars respecting Passports, see Bradshaw's Continental Guide, pages 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5.

PASSPORTS carefully mounted, and Names lettered thereon in Gold.
Cases from 1s. 6d. to 6s. each g Desks Travelling Bags (Leather) g and Pocket Inks and
g Soap Door and Window Fasteners
g Roll-up Writing Cases
g Pocket Memorandum Writing Cases
g Luggage Labels, adhesive, do. Parch-lags Carpet do.

Cash Belts, Straps, &c. Cash Bags and Purses
Student's and Portable Travelling Cases
Pocket and Memo andum Books
Polyglot Washing Books for Ladies' or Gentlemen—English and French—English and Italian —English and German—English and Spanish Foreign Post and Note Paper. Envelope, &c.
—English and Portuguese, at 1s. each, post-free, 1s. 1d.

And every description of STATIONERY, BARRICK and FOREIGN.
st editions of Bradshaw's Handbooks to France, Belgium, and the Rhine, Paris, Ireland, &c.; Murray's Handbooks; French and German Dictionaries; French and every description of English and Foreign Guide Books, &c.
W. J. Adams' British and Continental Guide Office, London: 59, Fleet Street.

Addresses of Experienced Couriers kept.

THE PATENT PORT HOLE COLLAR.

THE GORGET combines novelty with perfection of Fit, is acknowledged by all to be the easiest fitting Shirt yet made, and, by a simple invention of the Patentees, adjusts itself to all movements of the body, either, waiking sitting or riding — Price, including the REGISTERED ELLIPTIC WRISTBAND, 4s. the half dozen.

The ELLIPTIC three-fold COLLAR, quite unique, in all shapes with PATENT ELASTIC FASTENING, 1s. the doz. THE PATENT ELASTIC COLLAR FASTENING can be attached to any Collar.

Sample Shirt forwarded in an envelope of a Post Office Order for 1s. 6d.

THE ELLIPTIC COLLAR TO FASTEN IN FRONT
With Patent Elastic Fastening

Opening back or front. Size by Post on receipt of 12 Post 5 pence.

Directions for Measurement—

1. Round the Chest, tight over the Shirt.
2. Round the Waist, tight over the Shirt.
3. Round the Neck, middle of the Throat, tight.
4. Round the Wrist, tight.
5. Length of Coat Sleeve, from centre of Back, down to bottom of Cuff.
6. Length of Shirt at back.

To insure a Fit, the above measurements should be taken, without any allowance being made for shrinking. See if the Shirts are to open at the front. If with Collars attached, the half-doze extra. If Buttons or Studs in Front. If Buttons or Studs at Wrist.

Patentees, COOPER and FRYER, next door to the HAYMARKET THEATRE, LONDON, AND AT SOUTH WEST GALLERY, CRYSTAL PALACE, SYDENHAM.
MANUFACTORY, 18, SUTHERLAND SQUARE, WALWORTH ROAD

AGENTS.

Aylesbury—M. Connor.
Banbury—Wm. Lake, Horse Fair
Bath
Birmingham—J. Hollingsworth,
63, New Street.
Bradford
Brighton
Bristol
Cambridge
Canterbury—W. Claris and Son.
Cardiff
Carlisle
Chesham—R. H. Herington.
Cheltenham—C. Rinald, 2,
Promenade Villas.
Chester
Clifton—R. J. Basstone, 1, Carlisle Place.
Colchester [Street]
Covey—T. Morris, Hartford
Carmarthen—D. and W. Davies, Square.
Derby—C. Gamble, Sadler Gate.
Exeter
Frome—W. H. May.
Gloucester
Hemel-on-Thames—T. N. Watts

Hereford—Barrett and Smardon,
7 and 8 High Street.
High Wycombe—C. Meader.
Horncastle
Hull
Ipswich
Inverness—D. Macdougall, Royal Clan Warehouse.
Leamington—W. H. Haynes, Tailor, &c., 3, Victoria Parade.
Leicester—J. Carryer, Market Place.
Lichfield—G. R. Trafford, 2,
Exchequer Gate.
Liverpool—Jackson Brothers,
46, Castle Street.
Macclesfield—J. Jackson, Tailor,
Market Place.
Maidenhead—Wm. Box.
Manchester [Street]
Marlborough—C. Blacks, High
Miford—Sands and Blackett.
Newbury—L. Sweetenburgh,
Northbrook Street. [Row]
Nottingham—M. Vowles, Long Norwich
Newcastle

Newport, Monmouth—B. Evans
Newport, Isle of Wight—Robert Pincock.
Oxford
Penzance—Morris Jones, [Street]
Plymouth [Chapel]
Portsmouth
Redruth—E. Bath, Fore Street.
Ross—Frederick Roper.
Salisbury
Scarborough
Sheffield [Square]
Surreybury—T. Hall, Market
Southampton
Staines—F. Potts.
Sunderland [Ple Street]
Swansea—W. & Eaton, 4, Tem-pervort—Askew, Gold Street
Tewkesbury—Philip K. Ninor, Fore-st.
Trowbridge—W. Beaver.
Uxbridge—Town and Feil.
Weymouth
Winchester—J. A. Higgs.
Wolverhampton—T. L. Shaw,
23, Dudley street.
Worcester
York

Agents will shortly be appointed for the Towns not filled up.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

TOURISTS AND TRAVELLERS

Exposed to the scorching rays of the Sun, and heated particles of Dust, will find

ROWLANDS' KALYDOR

most refreshing preparation for the Complexion, dispelling the cloud of languor and relaxation, giving all heat and irritability, and immediately affording the pleasing sensation attending restored purity and healthful state of the skin. Freckles, Tan, Spots, Pimples, Fumaces, and Discoloration fly before its application, and give place to clear and healthy complexion. In cases of sunburn, or stings of insects, its virtues have long been now edged. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

• heat of the summer also frequently communicates a dryness to the hair, and a tendency to fall off, which may be completely obviated by the use of delightfully fragrant and transparent preparation, and as an invigorator and purifier for the Hair beyond all precedent.

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL,

The prices are 3s. 6d.; 7s.; Family Bottles (equal to four small), 16s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s.

For at this season can we be too careful to preserve the Teeth from the deleterious effects of gastric Acids (the immediate cause of toothache), by a systematic employment, night and morning, of

ROWLANDS' ODONTO,

OR PEARL DENTIFRICE,

White Powder, compounded of the rarest and most fragrant exotics. It bestows on the Teeth a sil-like whiteness, frees them from Tartar, and imparts to the Gums a healthy firmness, and to the breath a grateful sweetness and purity. Price 2s. 9d. per box.

Sold by A. ROWLAND & SONS, 20, Hatten Garden, London, and by Chemists and Perfumers. [74.]

CITY SOAP WORKS, LONDON, ESTABLISHED 1712.

NAPLES TRAVELLING TABLET.

THE refined habits of English Travellers, as yet but imperfectly understood or provided for, particularly by Continental Hotel-keepers, render a COMPLETE TOILET EQUIPMENT one of the first essentials of the Tourist; and amongst those equipments, nothing holds so important a place, as regards both health and comfort of the voyager, as a thoroughly good SOAP, in a compact and portable form. The objection to using Soap on a JOURNEY, has hitherto been the difficulty of putting it up whilst wet from use (as must frequently be done in hasty travel), without danger of spoiling whatever it comes in contact with. Messrs. GIBBS believe they have irretrievably obviated this difficulty, by the adaptation of an ELASTIC CASE (similar in construction to that invented by us for their SHAVING TABLETS), to contain a Tablet of their well-known NAPLES SOAP—a Soap compounded in the greatest care, and of the choicest materials, and which, having been now for many years before the Public, never fails to give entire satisfaction.

Each Tablet and Case is Stamped,

"CITY SOAP WORKS,"

LONDON.

Manufactured and Sold Wholesale by GIBBS, and Retail by CHEMISTS, and the usual Vendors of Each Wrapper bears the Signature of the Inventors and Sole Manufacturers,

